In the case of injunctions in matters of contract and tort, it is not necessary to separately consider temporary and perpetual injunctions in cases of contract for the kinds of cases, whether of contract or tort, in which an injunction, either temporary or perpetual, may be granted, do not differ from each other. If the case, as alleged, be such that at the hearing a perpetual injunction would not be granted, then clearly a temporary injunction ought not to be granted before the hearing, though, of course, it does not follow that a temporary injunction will be griuted before the hearing, in every case in which a perpetual injunction might fitly be griuted at the hearing, for to justify a temporary injunction, not only must the case be such that an injunction is the appropriate relat, but there must be the further ingredient that, unless the defendant is at once restrained by injunction, irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit can be decided upon its ments.

In the limited class of cases which are now to be considered, the injunctions are always from the nature of the case of a temporary character, and must thus be separately considered

Injunctions may thus be roughly divided into (A) injunctions whether temporary or perpetual in eases of (a) contract or (b) torf (r 2), and (B) temporary injunctions against (a) interference with the subject-matter of hitigation, or (b) fraudulent disposition of property pending hitigation (r 1)

The power given by r. 1, clause (a), is substantially the same as that long exercised by English Courts of Equity The object is to restrain the defendant from doing mything which may prevent the property remaining in statu quo during the pendency of a suit, upon the principle that when the plaintiff seeks to recover property in specie the defendant shall not be allowed to decide the question in his own favour by dealing or making away with the property, the right to which is the question in dispute. So the Court will restrain not only waste or damage to the subject of higation whether moveable or immoveable property but may also restrain the mere alicuation of property whether movethis or immoveable. For in every case the plaintiff might be put to the expense of making the vendor a party to the proceeding, and at all events his title, if he prevails in the action, may be embarrassed by such new outstanding title under the transfer (1) The Court, even though it acts on the doctrine of his pendens, will prevent, if possible, the necessity of proceeding on such a principle and will not in a proper case deprive a suitor of the more effective protection of au injunction (2) This clause deals with suits in which a claim is made for specific property in the hauds of the defendants, and it is only in such suits that any question can arise of waste, damage or alienation. The object of the exercise of the jurisdiction is to secure the safety of that specific property which is in dispute in the suit pending the litigation, as also at its close to secure that any decree which may be made with reference thereto shall not prove unfructuous (3)

The power, however, of issuing an injunction pendente lite ought to be most cautiously everused. It is only in cases where property, which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit, is in danger of being destroyed, damaged, or put beyond the power of the Court, that the latter ought to interfere so as to restrain persons who may turn out in the final event of the litigation to be the retual owners of the property from proper enjoyment and possession of it (4)

Immoveable property should always, if possible, be retained in statu quo, until the suit which is to determine the title to it shall have been decided (1)

The restraint imposed need not necessarily be absolute, but should be such is the circumstances require. So where the subject-matter of the minnetion comprised mortgage bonds and Government promissory notes the order of injunction while prohibiting my alienation of or dealing with the bonds or notes by the defendant, permitted him to sue upon the mortgage bond and take steps to realize the amount covered thereby, and ordered the money when iculized to be kept in Court until the disposal of the suit, and as regards the promissory notes permitted him to draw the interest as it fell due from time to time (2)

In granting a temporary injunction restraining the alienation of property, the subject of suit, the Court will, as in the case of other injunctions, first see that there is a bona fule contention between the parties, and then on which side, in the event of obtaming a successful result to the suit, will be the balance of inconvenience (3) if the injunction do not issue, bearing in mind the principle (alread) illuded to) of ict uning immoveable property in statu quo (4)

The wrongful sale of property in execution of a decree is only one form of ulicination which may be restrained pendente lite (5). Even a judicial sale if wrongful, will be restrained upon principles and circumst ruces which are hereafter dealt with

In order to obtain in injunction under the rule there must be (a) I suit in which the injunction may be granted, (6) and (6) the threatened danger of wiste, damane or alienation must be alleged and proved, (7) (c) in respect of property which is in dispute in that suit (8)

"Wrongfully sold in execution "-This is one of several forms of injunction in restraint of judicial proceedings (9) Prior to the Specific Relief Act the High Court restrained by injunction proceedings to be instituted and pending, as ilso proceedings not instituted but threatened, and prohibited the execution of decrees which had been or might be obtained (10) The matter is now is icourds permanent injunctions governed by the Specific Rehef Act and as regards temporary injunctions in part by the Code An opinion has been typic sed that temporary injunctions are limited to matters mentioned in sects 192 and 493 (now ir I and 2) of the Code And on this ground the Court iclused in interlocutory injunction restraining the defendant proceeding with sait filed by the defendant against the plaintiff in the Small Cause Court until the hearing of a suit in the High Court in which an application for an injunction was in the (11) But this case has been dissented from (12) It seems anomalous that a perpetual improction may be granted, but not an interlocutory one, where to refuse it may be to make the proposed decree unfructuous. An in junction in respect of civil judicial proceedings may have reference to an action or to proceedings taken in execution of a decree obtained therein R 1 deals with the particular case of wrongful sale in execution, a provision which was not contained in the Code of 1859 Sect 56 of the Specific Relief Act was not intended to and does not affect temporary injunctions applied for under seet 492 (now r 1) against the wrongful sale of property in execution of a decree Therefore a subordinate Court may issue an injunction restraining proceedings in execution pending before a superior Court (1)

The law does not say that a property is, or is about, to be wrongfully sold, but that it is in danger of being wrongfully sold (2) These words are wide enough to include.(3) and the section is, in fact, most commonly applicable to claims in execution made under O XXI r 58 If a claimant under that rule, whose claim has been disallowed, institutes a regular suit against the decree holder, the Court has power to grant an injunction staying the sale pending the decision of the suit (4) And the Code having been amended so as to admit of the grant of an interlocutory injunction in such a case, the procedure indicated by the rule should be followed, and a sale should in ease of applications by third parties, be restrained by injunction in the suit brought to try the title, and not by the order of the Court executing the decree (5) And in the execution of a decree ordering the sale of property, it is not competent for a Court to refuso to sell it because a stranger who is in possession of such property impeaches the decree, the course open to him if he wishes a stay of execution being to file a suit and obtain an injunction for that purpose (6) But though where property is in danger of wrongful sale the Court may issue an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing his decree against the property, yet when the Court dismisses the suit in which the injunction is sought and has been granted, it has no right to further restrain the defendant from executing upon the mere possi bility of the Appellate Court reversing its decree Oneo the suit is dismissed the Court has, in point of law, no power at all te deal with the proceedings in the suit in which execution has issued (7) Upon the dismissal of a suit for an mjunction restraining the sale, the Appellate Court may issue a temporary miunction restraining the decree holder from proceeding with execution pending the appeal, (8) and the application may be granted subject to the terms of the applicant giving such security as the Court thinks fit (1) This decision has, however, recently been dissented from, the Court holding that in a case like this it was impossible to say that the property was in danger of being wrongfully sold . that sect 492 of the last Code required that it must be "proved" that the property was in such danger, and that to hold in such an application this was proved would be to decide an appeal which was not before the Court (2) It is submitted that the question is rather one of fact than of law, though no doubt dealing with the matter as one of fact the decree appealed from would, unless it was clearly erroneous, prove a serious obstacle to the grant of an in junction. The Code directs that ordinarily before granting an injunction notice of the application should be given to the opposite party (3) Where a Court made an order granting a temporary injunction without directing notice of the application for an injunction to be issued to the other side, and its order directing stay of sale of property in execution was passed ex parte without the other side being given an opportunity to show cause, it was held that the order was irregular (4) The application should be made without unnecessary delay.(5) and should on the face of it disclose a sufficient ground to warrant an order heing made as prayed (6) The meaning of the word "wrongfully certain cases, be open to doubt (7) It is, however, clear that the property is not in danger of being wrongfully sold, when the plaintiff has no title to or interest in it, or if he has an alleged interest, when such interest is not the subject of sale in execution (8) So where ancestral property was attached in execution of a decree and a son of the judgment debtor instituted a suit to establish his right to the property and made an application for a temporary injunction directing stay of sale pending the decision of the suit, it was held that, masinuch as what was advertised to be sold was the right and interest of the plaintiff's father in the property, it could not be said that the property was being wrong fully sold in execution of a decree and the temporary injunction ought not to have been granted (9) It has been said that in interpreting this portion of the Code a Judge cannot be too eareful as to the mode in which he permits the machinery of the Courts to be used for the purpose of enabling a plaintiff in one suit to delay a decree holder in another from obtaining the fruit of his judg ment by executing his decree in ordinary course against the property of his judgment dehtor At the same time, it is of course, most desirable to guard as far as possible, against a multiplicity of suits, which was one of the objects the Legislature had in view in enacting the provision in its present shape Courts will, therefore amongst other things, consider whether the refusal to grant the application for an injunction will result in further higgation, and whether any practical injury will result to any one if the injunction be allowed (10) It has

Fraudulent disposition of property - This provision differs from that enacted by clause (a) in that the property dealt with by the injunction is not the property in dispute in the suit namely that to which both parties lay claim and the title to which has to be decided but is property whether moveable or immoveable (3) the title to which is admittedly in the defendant and therefore, not in dispute in the suit. It presupposes a general intention on the part of the defendant to defeat and defraud his creditors and permits of an injunction analogous to the remedy of attachment before judgment (4) The ordinary rule is that pending a suit to enforce a general claim against a person there cannot be an injunction to restrain him from parting or dealing with his property not being projectly specifically in dispute in the suit (5) When however such intended parting and dealing with property is not dono in the bond fide exercise of ownership but with an intent to defraud persons who being creditors of the owner, have or mught have the right to resort to such property in satis faction of their claim, there arises in their behalf an equity to restrain such threatened dealing with the property even as against its legal owner attachment unler O XXXVIII r 6 and an injunction under this clause have as their subject matter not the property in suit but the property of the defen dant therefore applications under these provisions are clearly distinguishable from an application for an injunction under clause (a) against the waste damage and alienation of property which is in dispute in the suit. And as applications under that Order and clause (b) are both distinguishable from an application under clause (a) so also applications under that Order and clause (b) respectively are clearly distinguishable from each other O XXXIII r 6 is applicable only to cases where it is probable that the defendant is about to make away with his property so as to make it impossible for the plaintiff to execute any possible decree against hun and empowers the Court in such a case to make an order calling upon the defendant for security and in default thereof to attach the property. It has no application where the property is the property in suit which must if necessary be followed under the provisions of r 1 clause (a) The latter provision applies to a case where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant in possession is likely to damage and make away with any property in dispute in the suit and empowers the Court in such a case to issue an injunction to the defendant to refrain from the particular act complained of (6) But though O XXXVIII r 6 and r 1 clause (b) of this Order have both this in common that the property to be dealt with hy the Court is not that in dispute in the suit the following important differences exist between these provisions. In the first place, the property is actually attached in the one case, while in the other the property is left in the owner's hands, subject only to the prohibition enjoined by the impunction. Secondly, the provisions as to attachment are generally limited to property sufficient to satisfy the decree which may be passed in the suits in which the application for attachment is made. Thirdly, questions have arisen as to the possibility of attachment where the property is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is pending, (1) whereas an injunction, in so far as its action is in personam, is not so limited Lastly, any private alienation made subsequent to attachment is null and void, but such is not the case with alienations made subsequent to the issue of an injunction either under clause (a) or (b) of the first rule (2)

3 Before granting injunction Court to direct notice to opposite party,

The Court shall in all cases, except where it appears that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party.

Order for injunction may be discharged, varied or set aside.

4. Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

Practice. Notice -The present Order contains the practice as regards temporary injunctions The practice as regards perpetual injunctions is the same as that which governs the making of decrees generally (1) Injunctions are granted upon suit, and should as a rule be specifically prayed for when the obtaining of this form of relief is a substantial object of the action. In urgent cases application for an injunction may be made ex parte without notice and before or after appearance As, bowever, enacted by r 3, notice as a general rulo must be given to the opposite party The power to issue an ex parte in junction no doubt exists, but the greatest care should be employed in its exercise, and only in cases where considerable mischief might ensue if the issue of the process were delayed until notice was given (2) If the Court be of opinion, upon an application ex parte, that the case is not so urgent as to require its immediate interference, it will either grant a rule nist or order notice of the application to be served on the defendant Where an injunction is granted without notice the party aggreeved may apply either to bave it discharged under r 4 or he may appeal, (3) though the former appears to be the more proper course appeal lies from an order refusing to issue an injunction without notice to the opposite party (4) In other than urgent cases application is generally made by motion for a rule ness or upon notice before or after appearance of the defendant

Instead of issuing an injunction in the first instance the Court may grant an interim order,(b) which is really an order in the nature of an injunction granted when the plaintiff, not showing quite a case for in ex parte injunction without more, shows a case for giving short notice of motion for an injunction and for protection in the meantime

An interim order and a rule nisi may be, and ordinarily are, granted at the In the case of every application it must be proved either (18 is usually the ease) by affidavit, or otherwise, that sufficient grounds exist for the grant of the relief claimed (1) The defendant's admission may, of course, be sufficient (3) Particular care must be taken to state all material facts fully aud fairly in applications for an exparte injunction, (3) such as injury, (4) defendant's intention to waste, damage, alienate, or to commit some other threatened injury (5)

If sufficient prima facio evidence is given the Court may either grant an injunction absolutely or as provided for in r 2 on terms. It may require the plaintiff or defendant to enter into terms as a condition of withholding an injunction. The most usual undertaking is to require a plaintiff as a condition of the Court's interference in his favour to abide hy any order which it may make as to damages (6). The undertaking is ordinarily given by Counsel or pleader on hehalf of the party for whom he appears, or h; the party appearing in person, and forms part of the order of injunction.

In some cases the motion for a temporary injunction is treated as a trial of the action, and the hearing of the cause is not proceeded with, the injunction heing by consent made perpetual on the motion. In eases, however, where relief, additional to that hy injunction, is sought, such a course is not feasible, and the trial proceeds, when upon judgment the injunction is made permanent or dissolved. If upon judgment the action is dismissed, any injunction which may have been greated goes as a matter of course. An injunction which has been granted upon an interlocutory application is superseded by the judgment is the action. If it is intended that it should remain in force it must be expressly continued.

Discharge, Variance and Dissolution A marked feature of temporary injunctions, as distinguished from those which are find or perpetual, is that the former are liable to be dissolved on notice upon sufficient cause shown at any stage of the proceedings after, or perhaps even before, the coming in of the answer (7) The application should be made on motion at any time before the hearing of the cause in which it was granted (8) and before the Court by which

ORDER XL.

Appointment of Receivers.

1. (1) Where it appears to the Court to be just and contenent, the Court may by order-Affordment of teceivers. (a) appoint a receiver of any property, whither before or after decree,

(b) remove any person from the possession or custody of the property ,

(c) commit the same to the possession custody or management of the receiver, and

(d) confer upon the receiver all such powers as to bring-ing and defending suits and for the realization, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of documents as the owner himself has, or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit

(2) Nothing in this rule shall anthorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove

The Court may by general or special order fix the amount to be paul as remuneration for the services Remuneration. of the receiver.

3. Every receiver so appointed shall-

(a) furnish such security (if any) as the Duties Court thinks fit, duly to account for what he shall receive in respect of the property,

(b) submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs.

(c) pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, and (d) be responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence.

4. Where a receiver—

Enforcement of recenters duties.

(a) fails to submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs, or

(b) fails to pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, or (c) occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the Court may direct his property to be attached and may sell such property, and may apply the proceeds to make good any amount found to be due from him or any loss occasioned by him, and shall pay the balonce (if any) to the receiver.

5. Where the property is land paying revenue to the Governwhen collector may be ment, or land of which the revenue has been assigned or redeemed, and the Court considers that the interests of those concerned will be promoted by the management of the Collector, the Court may, with the consent of the Collector, appoint him to be receiver of such property.

Amendments.—The former Chapter XXXVI, dealing with R. Cautas, contained three sections, 503, 504, and 505. Sect. 503 has (subject to the amendments itshicized) been incorporated in rr. 1-3. R. 1 curresponds with the first half and the last paragraph of sect. 503. R. 2 curresponds with the first portion of clause (d), the rest of that clause being rittain d in r. 1. R. 3 is the second half of sect. 503, less the last paragraph, which has been put in r. 1. R. 4 is new. R. 5 is sect. 504. Sect. 505 has been omitted. This is the most important change effected, as the former restriction of power to High Courts and Dilitate Courts has been removed. Other amendments of former provisions appear to be of a virbal character.

Just and convenient.—These words are derived from the English Judgeture Act which greatly calarged the powers which the Court of Chancery former!* exercised, and the Courts in Linda have the fullest jurisdiction to appoint, a will as for move desceiver in the exercise of judicial description.(1)

Definition and nature of the Office of Receiver.—A receiver as an addifferent person to the parties to a cause appeared by the Court to receive and preserve the property of find in largation produce like when it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should hold in (2) or where a justy is monipolent to do so, as in the case of an infant (5). a mere custodian having no powers except those conferred by the order of his appointment, though with the growth of Equity jurisdiction it has become usual to clothe them with much larger powers than were formerly conferred (1) I receiver is an officer of the Court through whom Equity takes possession of the property which is the subject of a higation, preserves it from waste and destruction secures and collects the proceeds and ultimately disposes of them secording to the rights and priorities of those entitled thereto whether regular parties in the cause, or only coming before the Court in a reasonable time and in the due course of procedure to assert and establish their claims representative of the Court he is subject to its orders accountable in such manner and to such persons as the Court may direct and has in his character as receiver uo personal interest save that arising out of his fiduciary capacity and responsi hility for the correct and futhful discharge of his duties. He is not the representative of a party or parties but the representative of the Court (2) A receiver can only be properly granted for the purpose of getting in and securing funds which the Court at the hearing or in the course of the cause will have the means of distributing among the persons entitled to those funds (3). The receiver appointed in a particular suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court so to speak for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court in order to preserve the subject matter of the suit pendente life and the po se sion of the receiver is simply the possession of the Court To such an extent is this the case that any attempt to disturb that possession without the leave of the Court is a contempt The receiver has no personal rights in the property and he cannot take any steps even for the purpose of defending his possession without the sanction of the Court Also as a rule so little personal interest of any kind has ho in the matter that he is not justified himself in making any application what ever to the Court If it is necessary that he should take action of any sort it is for the parties to the suit, or one of them to come to the Court to put him in motion and whatever the receiver rightly does with re_ard to the property. be does it simply in the character of agent for the owners of the property or the persons interested in it and with certain exceptions in no ense is principal (4) Although ordinarily a receiver does not himself apply for commencing proceedings for contempt, and although generally speaking the action is taken by the parties beneficially interested in the property there is nothing to prohibit his doing Receivers have on occasions taken action themselves without the parties coming forward in the matter (5). A receiver has a progrectary rights or interest whatever. Notwithstanding his appointment the proprietary right in the estate remains in the persons who are by law entitled to the estate (6) The receiver's posses iou is not a possession by any personal right possession of the Com t, and he is totally devoid of any interest in the property (1) A receiver should not be appointed in supersession of a bona fide possessor of the property in dispute unless there is some substantial ground for interference (2)

The general objects sought by the appointment of a receiver may be described to be to provide for the safety of property pending a litigation, and until the hearing of the cause, (3) or during the minority of infants—to preserve property in danger of being dissipated or destroyed by those to whose care it is by law entrusted, or by persons having immediate but partial interest therein (4). A neceiver duly appointed is from the moment of his appointment to be considered as an officer of the Court itself—the will be protected by it in the proper discharge of the necessary duties of his office, the possession of the receiver not being permitted to be disturbed without the special leave of the Court (5) and it will be troated as a contempt of the Court if any such interference takes place (6) the reason being as explained by Lord Eldon (7) that their possession is the possession of the Court, (8) and the Court being competent to examine the title will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of law, but will itself examine the title, the mode being by permitting the party to come in to be examined pro interesse suo (9)

The receiver's functions are to obey the orders of the Court, collect and account for the rents, and manage the estate, and the Court will see that this is done and protect the agent appointed under its order (10). Under the last Code a receiver might have been appointed of any property moveable or immoveable, the subject of a suit or under attachment (11). The words of the present rule are "any property," without either of these qualifications, which however doubtless still subsist. Where a receiver is required for the purpose not only of receiving rents and profits, or of getting in outstanding property but of carrying on or superintending a trade or business, he is usually called a manager, or a receiver and manager, (12) though the terms are synonymous (13). The appointment of a manager implies that he has power to deal with the property over which he is appointed manager, and to appropriate the proceeds in a proper

The Court will in no case as ame the mana-cment of a business or undertaking except with a view to the win ling up and side of the business or undertaking. The management is an interim mana-ement. its necessity and its purisdiction spring out of the purosliction to homolate and sell, the business or undertaking is managed and continued in order that it may be sold as a come concern and with the sale the mana-chient ends. A manager may be appointed to carry on a private trade or business so is to wind it im for the benefit of the parties interested (1) The Court, if it can appoint a receiver has amide power to provide for the minage ment of the property and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (2). In cases where the manager of the estate must necessarily tested in the country where the estate is situated, it is usual in Lughsh practice to add to the erder directing the ai pointment of a manager, in order for the appointment of one or more consignees (who are the paid agents of the Court to manage the estate which is in the hands of the Court) resident in England to whom the produce of the property in question may be remitted and by whom it may be disposed of (3)

The possession of the receiver is on lechalf and for the length of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed (1). His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceeding according to their titles. The property in his hands is in cu today le pa for the person who can make a title to it. It does not follow that because wide powers are conferred upon receivers including a power to remove the property in possession his relation either to the Court of to the parties interested in the proceeding undergoes in change in proportion to the extruct of his powers (5). The appointment though it may operate to change possession has no effect itself upon the title to the property in any way and determines no right is between the parties (6). Although a receiver is an other to hold property for the bonds of the party ultimately entitled to it.

yet when such property is ascertained, the receiver is considered as his receiver (1) He is not appointed for the benefit of strangers to the suit, but he is not to be regarded in any sense as the agent or representative of either party to the action, (2) though the ordinary law of principal and agent applies to this extent, that what the receiver rightly does he does in the character of agent for the owner (whoever be be) of the property, and this is so even in the case of parties who opposed his appointment or objected to his receiving particular powers (3) It was held under the Code of 1859, which contained less extensive provisions than those of the last and present Code, that his duties as officer of the Court were confined in the case of property the subject of attachment to realizing, preserving, or managing the property for the collection of the moneys and money profits due to the debtors (4) Where, however, the receiver of attached property acts in the exercise of powers conferred upon him by the Court, it is erroneous to regard him as the judgment creditor's agent because on his application the appointment is made. The appointment is the act of the Court, and once made he is au officer of the Court and subject to its orders (5) A receiver is frequently spoken of as the "band of the Court," and the expression very aptly designates his functions as well as the relation which be sustains to the Court and property in his hands are as much in the custody of the law as if levied upon under an execution or attachment, it being beld that the appointment of a receiver is in effect an equitable execution by means of which the Court makes a general appropriation thereof, leaving the question of who may finally be entitled to be determined thereafter (6) When a party is declared entitled to the property by the final decree in a suit the Court has no option but to give that party possession of it. The Court having been in possession of the property on hehalf of the parties to the suit is bound to give possession to the successful party in that suit Any one clse entering into possession would be a trespasser (7) He has no estate or interest himself, and his power to manage is created snuply by the order of the Court appointing him and is binding only upon the persons before the Court (1) This powers at best are no more than those which the parties to the suit turn out to be possessed of when the case is finally decided, but if he takes possession of property under colour of his appointment his conduct cannot be disputed by a motion to discharge or get rid of the attachment (2). As the servant of the Court and not of the parties he has only such power as the Court may choose to give him and it is a contempt for any of the parties to enter into an agreement with him restricting and controlling his powers (3)

Appointment of receiver is a form of specific relief-The appointment of a receiver pending a suit is a form of specific rehef (4) The last Cod () further provided for the appointment of a receiver of projects under attachment (6) This can still be done by virtue of the words property and before or after decree Rehef by specific performance injune tion and receiver belong to the same branch of the law Moreover the appoint ment of a receiver operates as an injunction against the parties their agents and persons claimin, under them restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7) and an order for an injunction is always more or less included in an order for a receiver - it is not necessary if a receiver be appointed to go on and grant an injunction in terms (8) All three forms of rehef are dealt with by the Specific Rehef Act The issue of temporary injunctions and the appointment of receivers together with the subject of arrest and attachment before judgment and interlocutory orders were dealt with by the last Code under the single heading of Provisional Remedics (9) Relief granted by appointment of a receiver gendente life bears in many respects a close analogy to that by temporary injunction Both are extraordinary equitable remedies as distinguished from the ordinary modes of administering relief. Both are essentially preventive in their nature, being property used only for the prevention of future mury rather than for the redress of past grievances Both have one common object in so far as they seek to preserve the res or subject matter of the litigation unimpaired to be disposed of in accordance with the future decree or order of the Court (10)

Whether I owever the negative duty or duty to abstain be contractual or general the injunction which enforces it is the same in nature and form. The general grounds of similarity between relief by receiver and by injunction have been a liverted to. Perhaps the principal element of difference between these two important remedies lies in this. that an injunction is strictly a conservative remedy, merely restraining action and preserving matter in statu quo without affecting the possession of the property or fund in controversy, while the appointment of a receiver is usually a more active remedy since it clarges.

the possession as well as the subsequent control and management of the property The Court by an injunction ties up the hands of the defendants, and preserves unchanged not only the property itself but the relations of all parties thereto But in appointing a receiver the Court goes still further, since it wrests the possession from the defendant, and assumes and maintains the entire manage ment of the property or fund, frequently changing its form, and retaining posses sion through its officer, the receiver until the rights of all parties in interest are satisfactorily determined

From the point of resemblance already indicated, it is not to be inferred that the appointment of a recence necessarily follows from the granting of an injunction or that the two remedies are necessarily inseparable. And while it frequently happens that the Comits are called upon to administer both species of relief in the same action and at one and the same time yet it by no means follows that because an injunction is granted a receiver must be appointed and the two are to be treated as distinct and independent matters. The Court, therefore, may refuse a receiver although the case presented is a fitting one for an injunction, and although an injunction has already been granted (1) A distinction exists between the ease in which an injunction and that in which a receiver will be issued and appointed respectively "That distinction seems to be that, while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case it would be sufficient if it bo shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, while in the latter case a good prima facie title has to be made out "(2)

Relief, whether it be given by the issue of an injunction or the appointment of a receiver, is grauted generally upon the principle quia timet, that is, the Court assists the party who seeks its aid, because he fears (quia timet) some future probable injury to his rights or interests, and not because an injury has already occurred which requires any compensation or other relief

Law relating to receivers -The lin relating to the appointment of receivers in Civil suits (3) in British India (4) is contained in this Code (5) and in the Specific Relief Act, (6) which merely declares that the appointment of a receiver pending a suit rests in the discretion of the Court, and refers to the Code of Civil Procedure for the mode and effect of their appointment and for their rights powers, duties, and liabilities Both the earlier Codes (Act VIII of 1859, and X of 1877) dealt with the subject (7) Act X of 1877, however contained provisions of a more complete character and which were in fact

th some minor discretions in the sections relating to receivers, the same as use of the mic ent Code. Sect. 92 of Act VIII of 1859 analyted the Court appoint a receiver or manager in all cases in which it much appear to the ourt to be necessary for the preservation of the better management or the isteds of any property " which is in dispute in a suit," and sect 243 enabled ie Court to appoint a manager to realize debts or rents and receipts of landed concity where the debts or land were attached in execution of decree Chanter XXVI. of the Code of 1877 which with some minor alterations (f) was deutical with the same Chapter of the fast Code, simpled the place of both of hese provisions, and one further case the Court very central powers as to he appointment of receiver (2) Further, orders made under sect 92 of Act VIII if 1859, were appealable only at the instance of the defendant (3) but orders made under sect 503 of the Codes of 1877 (f) or 1882 (5) were annealable at the instance of either parts. Prior to the establishment of the High Courts, the Sunreme Courts of the Presidencies appointed receivers following the principles and prictice of the Court of Chancers in England (b). The provisions of the present Code are (with one unportant exception) the same as those of the list. with certain omissions which have been noted and additions which have been italicized, and the principal of which will be found in rr. 1, 2, and 4. The execution is the omi sion of sect 505 of the last Code as to which see post

Jurisdiction to appoint a receiver —The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in this country to grant relief by injunction or receiver is determined by the Code and Specific Relief Act. Certain common conditions are necessary to the existence of jurisdiction to grant either of these forms of relief. Shortly stated (7) these conditions are as follows —

(4) In the first place specific relief whether given by the issue of an injunction or the appointment of a receiver, cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law,(1) that is, such enforcement must not be the sole object of requiring specific rehef, but the real object must be the protection of some civil rights or the prevention of a tort or civil wrong Though, however, the Court cannot interfere for the purpose of giving a better remedy in the case of a criminal offence, yet if an act which is criminal touches also the enjoyment of the property, the Court has purisdiction (2) So the fact that an act complained of amounts to the criminal offence of inisappropriation rather than to simple waste, is no ground for refusing relief by way of appointment of a receiver (3)

(B) Secondly, assuming the matter to be of a civil nature, it is ordinarily a necessary condition to the grant of either form of relief that there should be a suit pending in which either of these reliefs may be granted (4) Under the last Code, however, a receiver might have been appointed not merely of property the "subject of a suit," but also of property "under attachment ' And though these words are omitted this is doubtless so now (5) The suit must be pending in the Court from which either of these reliefs is sought Thus, a District Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or manager in respect of property in dispute in a suit pending in a Subordurate Court, (6) and where a Court has thus no jurisdiction to make an order it can have no jurisdiction to modify such order (7) R 1 gives power only to the Court in which the suit is brought or by which the property has been attached A Court cannot appoint a receiver except it has seism of the property either by a suit being pending or by proccedings in execution of deeree made in a suit being pending, and attachment having been made. It is only the Court in which a proceeding is pending, and which has thereby the property under its control, that can appoint a receiver It was formerly only where the procedure contained in sect 505 of the last Code had been adopted that a District Court could appoint a receiver in suits pending before or attachments made by subordinato Courts (8) As to this now, ride post

(C) Thirdly, not only must the matter be of a civil, as opposed to a eriminal, nature and subject to what is above stated a suit be pending, but such suit must disclose a cause of action, and the Court must have general jurisdiction If it has not such purediction it will plainly have no power to to entertam it grant rehef The Court must not be barred by the Code or any other enactment from taking cognizance of the suit, which must further be not only of a civil nature generally, but within the meaning of that Code (9)

(D) Lastly, the Court to which application for the relief prayed for is male, must be one which, assuming all the preceding conditions to have been fulfilled, has otherwise jurisdiction to try the suit in which that relief is sought. With regard to this, the extensive power of the Court of Chancery to act in personam must be considered with reference to the limitation on part diction imposed by the Charter and by the Code The Courts of this country have ordinarily no jurisdiction to try suits for numoveable property where such property is situate without the local limits of their jurisdiction and it would appear to be doubtful whether the equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely, to take cognizance of any equity between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands outside it. But whatever may be the precise extent of the jurisdiction the Civil Procedure Code has given to the Mofassil Courts the power to act in personam when the person against whom relief is sought resides within the jurisdiction. The Presidency High Court under their Charter have a similar, but in terms less restrictive, jurisdiction (1) In the case of receivers it is not necessary in all cases to nuthorize the Court to make un appointment that the property in respect of which the receiver is to be appointed should be within the local limits of its jury diction (2)

The Presidency High Courts possess the same powers with regard to the appointment of a receiver as are possessed and exercised by the Courts in England under the Judicature Act of 1873, and the practice in respect of these matters should be the same (3) Formerly while all Civil Courts with certain exceptions had jurisdiction to issue injunctions on the other hand the powers conferred by the Code in respect of the appointment of receiver could be exercised by the High Courts and District Courts only provided that whenever the Judge of a Court subordinate to a District Court (4) considered it expedient that a receiver should be appointed in any suit before him, he nominated such person as he considered fit for such appointment and submitted such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court and the District Court authorized such Judge to appoint the person so nominated or passed such orders as it thought fit (5) The first step taken by the Subordinate Judge was to nonmaste, and from this proceeding there was no appeal the Judge then approved and authorized the appointment and from this also there was no appeal then the Subordinate Judge appointed the receiver previously monumeted and from his order there was an appeal (6) The Judge of the Lower Subordinate Court had first to satisfy himself that it was expedient that a receiver should be appointed in a suit before him, for this purpose he had to inquire judicially, and satisfy himself upon evidence that the appointment of a receiver was necessary and recommend n proper person He did this under sect 503 of the last Code If he refused to do it his order refusing the application was an order under the same section, and as such was appealable (1) In the first of the last mentioned cases, it was held that an order by a Subordinate Judge dismissing an application for the appointment of a receiver after obtaining sanction from the District Judge was appealable But it was recently held that a Subordinate Judge when cou sidering the expediency of the appointment of a receiver, was also acting under sect 503, and whether he appointed or whether he refused to take the necessary steps picliminary to the appointment, he was equally acting under sect 503 and an appeal lay (2) After such inquiry he was to nominate such person as he considered fit to be nominated, and submit such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court then, if the District Court authorized such Judgo to appoint the person so nominated, but not etherwise he was to appoint him But the Judge of the District Court might decline to authorize the Judge of the Lower Court to make the appointment of the person so nominated, and might himself pass—such other order as he thinks fit 1(3) These words in the last Code gave the Judge of the District Ceurt full control over the matter of the appeintment of a receiver. His duty was not only to approve or disapprove of the particular person nonmated, but alse to take into consideration the necessity for the appointment of a receiver at all (4) These werds gave full discretion to the District Judge to pass such order as the encum stances of the case, considered in all their bearings, required He might give the proper directions to the Subordinate Court Nomination in sect 505 secued to be equivalent to the conditional appointment of a receiver which the District Court could necept or reject or modify (5) In the latter case the District Judge made an ex parte order for the appointment of a receiver under sect 503 Subsc quently, the District Court made an order admitting a review The plaintiff appealed to the High Court Without deeiding whether an appeal would be against the order of the District Judge, the High Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the order of the District Judge having been in the first instance ex parte, he had clearly the power to review it (6) But these words, it was held, must be read as controlled by the words preceding them and did not confer upon the District Court the power itself to appoint a receiver not nominated by the Subordinate Court (7) The Judge of the Lower Court, in making his inquiry had all the power conferred upon him that might be necessary for such inquiry. He might adjourn the case from time to time, and he might hear fix headence at any time before he made the appointment. He might even abstrain from appointing when he had received the necessary authority, if he had good grounds for so doing otherwise he might be appointing an unfit person when he had facts before hun to show that the appointment would be most improper. Sect 503 of the former Code we not important e. It merely enabled the Judge of the Lower Court to appoint when authorized by the District Court to do so (1). Is already stated sect 505 of the former Code has now been ountful. It was considered that its effect in precise was often to defeat the purpose for which an application was made and that having regard to their standard of efficiency there was no longer any reason to withhold from Sub-onlinate Judges the nower to appoint receivers.

The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver may be exercised either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appeal (2) In order to give the Court juris diction there must be a pending suit, (3) and the Court cannot in so far as its power to appoint a receiver extends only to the better management or enstody of any property which is the subject of a suit appoint or continue the previous appointment of a receiver when the suit comes to an end by its dismi al (4) but when a suit is decreed, there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which limits the power of the Court to appoint a receiver after the decree when this course is necessary or proper. This is now expressly stated. As long as the order appointing a receiver remains unreserved and as lon_ as the suit remains a lis pendens, the functions of the receiver continue until he is discharged by order of the Court (5) Although the dismissal of a suit may operate as a discharge of the receiver appointed in it (6) vet the Court has ample jurisdiction without the aid of a pending process to require accounts from its own officer, to permit parties interested to intervene in the examination of these accounts, to make just allowances to its officers for his administration and to deal with all questions of costs connected with the investigation of his recounts as between him and any parties interested who may be allowed to appear and take part in it (7)

The Court of it can appoint a receiver has a uple powers to provide for the management of the property—and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (9). The subject matter of the appointment was in terms of the last Code (tude now arte) property moveable or immoveable which was 't the subject of the suit (9).

or "under attachment," which latter words applied to property taken for the first time in execution of any decree (1) Where the property to be managed is not the subject of the suit no manager can be appointed before attachment (2) Where, owing to the value of the subject matter of a suit, the Court has no power to try the same, any order made therein by way of appointment of a receiver is passed without jurisdiction (3) The fact that the acts complained of, and which form the ground of an application for a receiver, amount to a criminal offence rather than to a civil wrong, will not deprive the Court of jurisdiction, if such acts affect a right to property (4) It was held by the Allahabad High Court that the fact that there exists, in respect of any immoveable property an order of a Magistrate passed under sect 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is no bar to the exercise by a civil Court of the power conferred on it by r I of appointing a receiver in respect of the same property, for the Magistrate's order under sect 145 is only intended to control any period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seism of the matter, and passes such order as may be necessary for the protection of the property (5) But it has been recently held by the Calcutta High Court that the appointment of a receiver by a Civil Court under r 1 of this order cannot supersede an appointment by a Magistrate, and that the Court should either appoint as its receiver the person appointed by the Magistrate or should make a conditional appointment and inform the Magistrate of it so that he may have an opportunity to withdraw his attachment (6)

The appointment may be made either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appellate or revisional jurisdiction. Where a Court of first instance dismisses a suit it becomes functus office save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs. An application, therefore, made to a Court of first instance after dismissal of the suit, but before appeal filed, asking that a receiver might be restrained from parting with funds in his hands, pending an appeal, was held to be one which the Court had no jurisdiction to grant. The Court's jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be

appeal to the Court, he must, even when the appeal is no longer pending, be regarded as the receiver of the property of which he has been put in possession until he is finally discharged, and the Appellate Court has jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to the receiver, including proceedings for contempt, until he has had his accounts passed by t (1)

The grant of preventive or protective relief is purely discretionary—The exercise of the jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or issue an injunction (2) is not a matter ex debito justitue, but one which is purely within the discretion of the Court. The latter is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so. But the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of Apperl (3). All questions of discretion are usually questions of degree (4). Where there is a discretion exercisable the Court is bound to look at all the circumstances of the case (5). The jurisdiction of the Court to interfere being equitable is governed on equitable principles. And, therefore, the Court will amongst other things look to the conduct of the prison who makes the application (6). Where in appeal attacks the exercise of discretion, before the Appellate Court will interfere on this ground in favour of the appellant, the latter must vitish such Court that the discretion has been improped to exercised (7).

The appointment as well as the removal of a receiver is also a matter which itself in the sound discretion of the Court (8). In exercising its discretion the Court should proceed with caution (9) and be governed by a view of the whole creumstances of the case (10). The power conferred by the Code to appoint a receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course, and it is not a reason for illowing an application for the appointment of a receiver, that it can do no harm to appoint one (11). The discretion given by the Code is one that should be used with the greatest care and caution (12) and the appointment of a receiver is a step which should not be taken without special reasons particularly in the case of a bon i fide possessor with legal title (1) The main principles upon which such discretion should be exercised have been laid down in the case of Owen v Homan, (2) and those principles have been held to be as equally applicable in this country as in England (3) In that case Lord Cranworth said -" The receiver, if appointed in this case, must be appointed on the principle on which the Court of Chancery acts of preserving property pending the hitigation which 15 to decide the right of the litigant parties In such cases the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property Where indeed, the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should Such is the case when a receiver of a property of a deccased prevent a scramble person is appointed pending a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration (4) No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking it and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant. But where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the culoyment the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong. If the plaintiff should eventu ally fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the Court may by its interim interference have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subse quent restoration (

As in the case of injunctions the Court will always look to the conduct of the party who makes the application for a receiver and will not interfere unless his conduct has been free from blame, (6) and parties who have acquiesced in property being enjoyed against their own alleged rights cannot come to the Court for this form of relief (7) A stronger case is generally required for the appointment of a receiver than for the issue of an injunction It may well be that encumstances which will warrant the issue of an injunction will not warrant the appointment of a receiver Accordingly, while the Court may in its dis cretion refuse to appoint a receiver, it may yet consider the case to be one which calls for an injunction The opinion of the Court of first instance is, in these matters, of great weight. It has all the facts and the parties before it, and is probably the best tribunal to decide whether it is necessary or expedient, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that a receiver should be appointed (1) And a party who in appeal attacks the exercise of this discretion should show that the discretion has been improperly so exercised (2). The exercise of the power being thus discretionary it would be difficult, even if it were possible, with any precision to make out the limits within which it is ordinarily circumseribed; but some of the principles which govern the discretion of the Court in such appointment will be found considered more fully and in detail in the work cited (3) in those Chapters which specially treat of the cases in which a receiver may be appointed.

The hest guides in the matter of interference by way of injunction and receiver have heen judicially stated to be the principles which determine the action of Courts of Equity in England (4) It is, in fact, on these principles that the rehef given in Indian Courts by injunction and receiver is in the main founded

A judgment of the Court which is an personam may be enforced by process in personam, that is, by attachment of the person when the person is within the jurisdiction or by sequestration of the goods or lands of the defendant when these are within the jurisdiction of the Court until the defendant do comply with the judgment or order of the Court (5) Under the authority conferred hy the Charters of the Supreme Courts and continued by their own Letters Patent, the High Courts in India possess the power of enforcing obcdience to their orders hy attachment for contempt,(6) and they have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing their decices in personam (7) The jurisdiction of the High Court to imprison for contempt is a jurisdiction that it has inherited from the old Supreme Court, and was conferred upon that Court by the Charters of the Crown, which invested it with all the powers and authority of the then Court of Chancery in Great Britain, and this jurisdiction has not been removed or affected by the Code (8) The power of the Mofussil Courts to commit for contempt, otherwise than under the authority of special statutory enactments conferring, or of case law recognizing, that power, is a matter of doubt (9)

plaintiff merely, but for all other persons who may establish right in the cause He is not the particular agent of any party but an officer of the Court (1) With regard to the limitations on his title, it is to be observed that his possession is subject to all valid and existing liens upon the property at the time of his appoint ment, and it does not divest a hen previously acquired in good faith (2) The rights of the parties to an action are not interfered with by the appointment (3) It is not averse to either party (4) If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter under a title paramount to that under which the receiver is appointed is in possession of the right which he claims, the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession (5) The appointment of a receiver is a matter which does not concern mortgagees or prior incumbrancers, for a receiver in the exercise of his authority will be obliged to respect former orders of the Court, and prior incumbrancers are at liberty to take such proceedings in behalf of their own interests as they may think fit (6) The appointment operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons clauming under them, restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7) The order does not, however, create a charge, but it operates as an injunction to restrain the defendant from himself receiving the proceeds of sale (8) A receiver of land never takes actual possession, he only receives the rent, nor does he receive such tent and profits hy virtuo of an estate or title vested in him, but he collects the same merely as an officer of the Court upon the title of some persons parties to the action (9)

Possession and interference with possession of receiver-The receiver heing the officer of the Court from which he derives his appointment, his possession is exclusively the possession of the Court, the property being regarded as in the custody of the law, in grenno legis for the benefit of whoever may be ultimately determined to be entitled thereto. The possession being therefore that of the Court may not be disturbed without the leave of the Court, and any person who disturbs such possession is guilty of a contempt and hable to punishment therefor No one is entitled to interfere with the possession whether he claims under, or paramount to, the right which the receiver was appointed to protect (10) Thus an attachment of money in the hands of the receiver is an interference with the Court's possession and may not, therefore, be made without the Court's leave first obtained (11) When the Court appoints a receiver it requires the parties to the action to give up the possession to the receiver of all property comprised in the ord r, and treats them as guilty of contempt if they refuse to do so (1)

As a general rule appointment of more than one receiver whether by the same or a different Court except in ease of joint receivers, is not allowable (2). If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter is in possession of the right which he claims the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession of the right and does not interfere with the excepts of it (3). If, on the other hand, the claimant is out of possession he must apply to the Court before he institutes any $\log_2 1$ proceedings affecting the possession which the receiver has acquired (1) exen where the receiver has been appointed without prejudice to the rights of persons having prior charges (5), too, where a receiver has been appointed over the extent of a tennit in possession, though the appointment does not affect the rights of the Lindlord, the latter will not be permitted to excrebe these rights, if or example the right of distring without preparation to distingt the leave of the Court (6).

Parties who e rights are interfered with by having a receiver put in their wix may, on making a proper application to the Court, obtain all that they may justly require. The Court has the power and will always take care to give a party who applies in a regular manner for the protection of his rights tho means of obtaining justice, and will even a sist him in ascerting that right and laying the benefit of it (7). The course of a party, who elimis a right paramount to that of the receiver, or rather to that of the party obtaining the receiver, is either to apply on notice in the action in which the receiver was impointed and to come in and be examined prointeresse suo, or to apply for leave to proceed by action intwithstanding the receivers possession (8). The application in the suit is usually framed in the alternative that the receiver do accede to the plautiff's demand or that the latter may be illowed to proceed (9). In most instances a party a greeved may have ample reflect by application on motion to the Court appointing the receiver. In most cases of claims against a receiver the nemedy by motion is adequate, and any person having such a claim may resort to this summary remedy. The more common practice and that which has been generally commended by the Court, is to hear and determine all rights of action and demands against a receiver by petition in the cause in which he was appointed without remitting the parties to a new and independent suit. And it rests wholly within the discretion of the Court to grant leave to bring an independent action against its receiver or to determine the controversy upon petition in the original cause (1)

Suits and applications against receiver .- It would be inconsistent with the main purpose of a receivership (to preserve property in controversy pendente lue) which devolves upon the Court the duty of protecting its possession, as well as incompatible with the dignity and authority of the Court, to allow its officer to be summoned before any tribunal in respect to the property in his hands, at the will of any and every person who has, or imagines he has, a just cause of action, or who for simister purposes might institute a fictitious suit against him On the other haud, to deny to those having just causes of action or claims which call for the adjudication of the Courts of Law or Equity, all opportunity for investigation and all right to a proper remedy, simply because the property to which they must look for reparation has been seized by the Court and is in its keeping, would violate the fundamental principles of personal rights The difficulty thus presented has been overcome by requiring all those who desire to bring suit against a receiver first to obtain leave to do so from the Court which appointed him The Court usually grants such leave unless it appears clearly from the application of the claimant that his demand has no legal foundation, the petition should therefore show a probable cause of action one demanding adjudication by proceedings in Court (2) If a receiver duly appointed an leave of the may be subje

leave of the may be subje

The proceedings in a suit so brought will generally be restrained by injunction, or stayed or set aside on motion. Whether the party proceeding at law did or did not know that a receiver has been appointed over the property, or however clear his right may be, the Court will restrain the prosecution of the claim if it be instituted without leave (3). It has even been held that the consent of the Court to an action against a receiver is a condition precedent to the right to sur, and cannot be rectified by a subsequent application for permission to continue the action brought without such permission (4). But several later cases have dis agreed with this (5).

It reads in the discretion of the Court to allow a party claiming rights against its receiver to bring an independent action regainst him or to compel such party to proceed against him by petition in the action in which he is receiver (1). When a Court is whed to give leave to site its receiver, it may, and usually must, examine into the merits of the claim to ascertain whether is suit is necessary or proper for its adjudication, but such examination and the order made upon it cannot be used by either party as in any way affecting the merits of the case. The order samply permits a judical investigation to be made, the examination is not itself a trial, nor is the decision an adjudication upon the merits (2)

Generally a receiver cannot be held personally hable in an action brought against him in his official capacity, the judgment being entered only so as to affect the funds in his hinds (3). An action cannot be brought against a receiver by a person it whose instance he was appointed (4). If a special case be made out, the Court will allow a party to continue an action, notwithstanding that it has been commenced without leave (5)

An application for leave to such receiver may be made exparte at the time of persenting the plaint and not in the suit in which the receiver has been appointed or on notice to the parties, (6) though it would appear that the latter course of applying in the suit has sometimes been followed (7). Any order declaring that leave to such so not necessary will not bind the parties who are not present (8).

It is, of course, no ground for refusing to appoint a receiver that the acts complained of amount to a criminal offence and that a criminal prosecution is available to the petitioner

Nextly, the situation of the property and parties must be considered

The crees may be dealt with in the following classes —(a) where the property is in modio, (b) where the plaintiff possesses an admitted interest, (c) where the plaintiff is title is disputed by the defendant claiming under legal title, (d) miscellaneous cases (1)

Where the property is, as it were, in media in the enjoyment of no one the Court can hardly do wrong in taking passession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scrimble, as where their is litigation as to the right to probate or administration (2)

The second case where plaintiff possesses an admitted interest is that of junt tenants and tenants in common in which the Courts are generally verse to interfere, (3) partition suits in which receivers are frequently appointed, (1) cases of tenant for life, remainderman. Hindu widow (5) partnership where such a state of freets is shown by the party compluing as if proven at the herring will entitle him to a dissolution (6) cases of trust where there are substantial grounds for the excreise of the jurisdiction, (7) infancy the property and interests of infants being under the pecidiar and exclusive care of the Court of Chancer. (8) and lumrot (9)

Thirdly, there are the cases of disputed title. If a right is asserted to property in the possession of the defendant claiming to hold under a legal title generally, a strong case is required to be made out. There must be some equity, danger of waste fraud abuse of trust or the like or want of reasonable appearance.

Rights and powers (a) General —It may be said in a general way that a receiver has no powers except such as are conferred upon hun by the order by which he is appointed and by the practice and usage of the Court. He is merely an officer of the Court his holding is the holding of the Court he is but a minister, and therefore has not the discretionary power of a person acting in a fiduciary character. In theory the Court itself has the care of the property in his hands. He can do nothing likely to seriously diminish the fund without the special leave of the Court He is not however increly the assignce of him whose property is placed in his care, but he may exercise such power in dealing with the property as belong to a receiver according to the practice of the Court and as are particularly conferred upon him by the order of his appointment (3) Under the Code the Court may grant to the receiver all such powers as to bring ing and defending suits and for the realization management protection preserva tion and improvement of the property the collection of the rents and profits thereof the application and disposal of such rents and profits and the execution of instruments in writing as the owner himself I as or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit (4) A receiver is at all times subject to the control of the Court which possesses the power to make all necessary orders for the control of receivers appointed by it (a) He has a right to the protection of the Court and his possession will not be allowed to be disturbed (6) The Court will see that he carries out his functions and will protect the agent appointed under its orders (7) The scope of the receivership may be extended

- (b) Discretion—In many matters of eare and management recurvers are allowed to use their own discretion subject to the control and approval of the Court—But in all important matters a receiver should apply for and obtain the direction of the Court which appoints him (8)
- (c) Application for instructions—A receiver has a right to apply to the Court for instructions when a question arise as to what may be in duty under its orders (9)

A received may be appointed without the consent of the decree holder (7). The scope of the powers and duties of receivers of attached property are water than those of managers under the Code of 1859 (8) " Powers of the owner," referred to m r I, must be read in connection with other provisions of the Code (9). - (i) Payment -As to payments out by receiver, see note (3)
- (i) Suits by or defended by receiver With regard to suits by a receiver, two questions require consideration, namely, as to his right to sue in general and as to the name in which he should sue One of the most important functions exercised by receivers in the discharge of their official duties is that of bringing such actions as may be necessary to the proper discharge of their trust, as well as to secure and protect the assets and funds to whose control they are entitled by virtue of their appointment (4) As a general rule all rights of action which belong to the party whose property is put into the bands of a receiver are trans forred to the latter by virtue of his appointment (5) The appointment does not affect existing contracts or rights of action between the party whose property is placed in the hands of a receiver and others, he has no greater rights or advantages than those possessed by his principal (6) A receiver therefore, cannot maintain an action upon a note or obligation running to the original party which he himself could not have maintained (7) His right of action relates back to the beginning of the title in the party for whose property he is if substituted in place of the owners of the property he acquires all their rights by subrogation (8) Inasmuch as for the purpose of actions and suits connected with the receivership receivers occupy substantially the same relation which was occupied by the original parties against whom or over whose estate they were appointed any defence which a defendant might have made to an action brought by the original party in interest is equally available, and nine be made with like effect when the action is instituted by the receiver (9) The fact that a person is an officer of the Court entitles him to no privileges not accorded to other suitors and in seeking relief he must commence his actions by the same process that other suitors are required to employ (10) A receiver's hability for costs in an action instituted by him on behalf of the estate is similar to that of any other trustee-is of an executor or administrator-who sues for the interest of an estate but being in other of the Court he usually receives special con ideration (11) Should be fail in his action he will of course be directed to pay the costs of the defendant. estate he represents, he will if be has acted properly, with care and in good faith he allowed his costs out of any funds which are in, or may come to his hands (1) Such an order in favour of a receiver will, however, generally, only he made in the suit in which he has been appointed, and not in the suit brought by him, unless in such latter suit the estate which he represents is fully before the Court Since, however, a receiver sues in a representative capacity and not in his personal right, it is necessary that be should not only set out in his pleading the right of the party whom be represents but also the authority under which he assumes to act Courts are inclined to the exercise of a strict control over their receivers in the matter of allowing them to bring suits concerning their receivership and an action brought by a receiver is considered as brought under the order of the Court itself If, therefore a suit is instituted without authority the parties are entitled to the protection of the Court against such unauthorized proceedings on the part of the receiver, who will be directed to discontinue the action (2) The usual practice both in England and America (3) and in this country before instituting actions by a receiver in matters connected with his trust is to apply to the Court, from which he derives his appointment, for leave to hring such action And, although it is frequently the case that the order of appointment in general terms authorizes the receiver to sue for and collect all demands due yet it is a common and a safe practice to first obtain special leave of Court before beginning the action. In order to word the necessity of frequent application to the Court for liberty to sue it has become customary to give to the receiver in the order by which he is appointed general leave, but as the authority to sue conferred by the order of appointment is confined to such suits as are contemplated by the order (4) and doubt may arise whether the particular suit brought is within the terms of the anthority it is customary as above stated to obtain special leave in each case. Proof of the appointment of the accesser and of leave to sue is generally given by the pro durtim of a certified copy of the respective orders. It seems to he established that the regularity propriety or necessity of the appointment of a receiver is men to be questioned in a merely collateral action at least by practice or percess to the action in which the appointment was made. As to the rights of other partus in this respect there seems to be a difference of opinion. It has been said to be probable that those who were entire strangers to the original proceedings should be allowed in a collateral action where their interests are affected by the appointment to attack the order on the ground that it was procined through frond collusion or deception practised on the Court but for no other reason (5) The general doctrim recognizing a receiver as the officer of the Court is not to be understood as limiting or restricting lus rights in the manacement of a suit which he has once undertaken, and after entering upon a litigation he is regarded as being entitled to all the freedom of action of any other suitor, and the fact that he appeals from a decision which is against him is not of itself evidence of bad futth or of mismanagement of his trust, and may he a mentorious rather than a consurable set (1)

Some conflict of authority exists whether, in the absence of the special authority, a receiver may sue in his own name or in the name of the original party in whose favour the action accrued. In the first case a distinction must be drawn between the cases where, though the party suing may be a receiver. he bas an independent cause of action entitling him to sue, and to sue in his own name, and in which eases he does not really sue in his character of receiver. So a receiver, who is holder of a hill of exchange, may by the law merchant sue in his own name . (2) also when, as hailce, be has a special property in the goods : (3) or if he is possessed of chattels and those chattels are unlawfully detained from him So, too, after a tenant has attorned to the receiver and so created a tenancy between him and the receiver, the latter may distrain upon the tenant in his own name, and on his own authority without leave obtained from the Court , (4) and there may be other eases in which, having an independent cause of action, the fact that he is receiver does not disquably him from suing (5) In other cases, however, and where the receiver is suing in respect of a cause of action which has accrued to him in his representative capacity from the party whose estate he holds, the prevalent rule appears to he that where the matter is not controlled by statute or order of the Court, the receiver should sue, not in his own name, but in that of the parties whose estate he holds (6) But this view is stated (7) to he losing ground and has not always been adhered to either in America (8) or England (9) and it has been held in the former country that a receiver by virtue of his appointment is a quasi assignee invested with title to such an extent at least as will enable him to sue in his official character (1) Where the order appointing the receiver gives him power to sue in his own name or in the names of the parties to the suit, it might well be held that such an order merely entitles the receiver to sue in his own name in cases in which such action is proper, and in all other cases to use the names of the parties It has, however, been decided that the Court had authority under sect 503 (now r 1) to confer on a receiver the power to sue in his own name, and that if the order appointing the receiver gives him liberty, he may do so in any case (2) Where the receiver is permitted to sue in the names of the parties and does so, no action on their part is necessary (3) A receiver of attached property may also sue He does not represent the estate for all purposes would have none of the powers which may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property helonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (4) It has been held that where a receiver institutes proecedings, and is then replaced by another receiver, it is necessary that the new receiver should be made a party to those proceedings (5)

The necessity for permission extends not merely to suits brought by, but also to suits defended by, the receiver (6) The proper rule as regards applications in respect of the estate is that they should be made by the persons bene ficially ontitled, and not by the receiver, though it must be admitted that receivers bayo often originated proceedings in their own name (7)

A receiver may be ordered to account although the suit in which he was appointed may be no longer pending (13) It I is new and contains important provisions in this respect. It has been drafted on the lines of sect 15(4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The original proposal to imprison receivers was considered too wide and has been omitted

Jurisdiction to remove and discharge—The power to terminate flows naturally and as a necessary sequence from the power to create. The power of the Court to remove or discharge a receiver whom it has appointed may be exercised at any stage of the hingation. It is a necessary adjunct of that power of appointment and is exercised as an incident to or consequence of, that power, the authority to cell such officer into being necessarily implying the authority to terminate his functions when their exercise is no longer necessary, or to remove the incumbent for an abuse of those functions or for other cause shown, and the cases upon this branch of the subject will resolve themselves into two classes. The cases of removal or substitution for cause, and eases of final disclarge because of the necessity of the appointment having ceased to exist (14).

security is insufficient the Court may remove him summarily, and direct the delivery of all the assets to his successor, if he neglect or refuse to procure additional sureties (1) Where a receiver becomes bankrupt he will be discharged and a new receiver appointed (2) If a receiver has been wrongly appointed over property of a person not a party to the cause he will be discharged although there has been an abatement by the death of the sole defendant (3) When a receiver has been appointed temporarily in an ex parte proceeding, or before answer, and it subsequently appears from the defendant's pleading or otherwise that the appointment ought not to have been made, or that the complainant has prescuted no case for the intervention of a Court of Equity, it is proper that the receiver should be removed. So where it is made to appear that there was no necessity for the appointment of the receiver, or where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that all the usual grounds for the appointment of a receiver-such as imminent danger to the property, fraud, insolvency, and the like-are wanting, the Court will remove the receiver and restore the status quo But where a receiver enters in good faith upon the discharge of his duties and the parties in interest acquiesco for a considerable time, their laches may be such as to defeat a subsequent application on their part looking to the icmoval of the receiver (4)

Since absolute impartiality as between the parties to the litigation is in undispensable qualification of a receiver, upon an application for lus removal the Court may properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies. And when it is shown that he was the nomineo of one hostile party and hitterly opposed by the other, and that he was appointed under the mistaken belief that all interests had united in his selection, and that hy reason of his interest his efficiency as an officer of the Court is impaired, it is proper to remove lum (a) The mere fact of relationship between the receiver and the plaintiff in the action in which he was appointed as not, of itself, sufficient ground for his removal such relationship affording at the most, merely s excumstance to be taken into consideration at the time of his appointment, it heig the general rule that no relative of either of the parties ought to be selected is receiver. But where, in addition to relationship has and improper conduct are shown a ground is made for his removal (6)

It is in established tale that a receiver will not be arbitrarily removed and mother person substituted in his place in the absence of a substantial ground, merely because certain parties in interest desire it. But it is competent for the Court to remove one receiver, and to substitute mother in his stead his consent of all parties when the proceedings are bona fide, and when there is no attempt to traffic in the receivership (7). Where a receiver had been appointed in an administration sint another receiver who offered to act at a lower salary was, on the application of a morthic collision into the effthe property, ordered to be substituted for him (8)

The rule that a receiver may be removed for intsconduct or breach of trust ince out of the nature of the office, and the supervising power of the Court of Chancers Whenever the receiver is cults of mustersauce or malfersauce m o hee it is the duty of the Court to call him to account, and in a 1 more ease it has the undoubted right to order a summary removal (1). Lather mismanage ment or incompetence is a ground for removing a receiver (2) A receiver will be removed if his appointment has been an improper one (3) if he is irregular in carrying in and bassing his accounts. Final discharge of the receiver -The discharge of a receiver may take place either during the course of the proceedings or at the conclusion of the htt. atom \ receiver is cenerally continued until judgment, but according to the decision undermentioned (8) if the right of the plaintiff ceases before that time the receiver may be discharged, and cannot be continued at the instance of the defendant. In this case the plaintiff claiming to be an equitable creditor or meumbrancer of the defendant had obtained a recurser of the rents and profits of defendant s real estate upon which he claused to have a charge Defendant having paid and plaintiff having received the amount claimed to he due the receiver was discharged, although other defendants claiming to have annuaties or meutubranees upon the same property objected, and asked to be heard against the discharge Lord Eldon said. I apprehend that with the right of the plaintiff to have the receiver must fall the rights of the other parties. It would be most extraordinary if because a receiver has been appointed on behalf of the plaintiff any defendant is entitled to have a receiver appointed on his helalf. We decided on mion is that the order for the receiver must be discharged and that all falls together. unnecessary, or the object of the receivership is attained, the receiver will be discharged (1)

While the property of discharging a receiver, like that of appointing hun, is to some extent a matter of judicial discretion, jet in some cases the right to a discharge becomes an absolute right which the Court has no discretion to refuse (2) In such a case, therefore, the granting of the order of discharge is uot a matter of discretion, hut its refusal is error which may be reversed ou appeal.(3)

In general a receiver will not be discharged until the object for which he was appointed has been fully accomplished, or until the Court is satisfied that the exigency calling for a receiver has ceased (4) Since the final decree in the cause is generally decisive of the subject matter in controversy, and deter unnes the right to the possession of the fund or property held by the receiver, it is usually the case that such decree supersedes the functions of the receiver since there is then nothing further for him to act upon If, on the other hand, the result he favourable to the defendant, the functious of the receiver are at an end, and it is proper to order him to account and be discharged (a) An order of dismissal of the suit which follows on the roversal of an order appointing a receiver elearly operates as a discharge of the receiver (6)

Under the Civil Procedure Code, once a suit has been dismissed, the Court dismissing it is functus officio except that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs Its jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be a pending suit (7) If, on the other hand, the controvers; terminates favourably to the plaintiff or the party at whose sustance the receiver was appointed, it will usually devolve upon him to carry out the decree of the Court recording to the nature of the receivership and his powers under the decree (8) It has been said that the determination of the suit, however will not, spso facto, discharge the receiver, but his functions must be terminated by a formal order of Court (9)

Unless the number of the order appointing or continuing a receiver and manager contain a provision for his discharge, an application to the Court is in general necessary to direct the possession of the receiver. The appointment of a receiver made previous to judgment will not be superseded by it unless the receiver is oidy appointed until judgment or further order (10) The receiver may, however, be continued by the decree (11) The Court has juri diction notwithstanding a receiver has been discharged, to surcharge him in his accounts, (12) or to order him to pay his balance together with the amount illowed him for his salary and interest (13)

The decree may direct a permanent appointment, in which case the discharge of the receiver is a matter of discretion (1)

Discharge of sureties -The sureties of a receiver will not be discharged at their own request, and no regard will be had to their application unless it s for the benefit of the estate or unless there he special circumstances in the ease,(2) as for instance where underhand practice can be proved, and the person secured can be shown to be connected with such practice (3) Where also a surety had become such in violation of partnership articles, he was discharged on his own application (4) When a surety procures his discharge during his continuance of the receivership the receiver must enter into a fresh recognizance with new sureties When a surety becomes bankrupt the receiver is usually required to enter into a fresh recognizance with two or more sureties. If a surety dies without leaving any property available for the satisfaction of the recognizance, the Court will direct a new surety to be appointed, but the rule is otherwise where he leaves real property bound by his recognizance (5) The condition of the bond is that if the receiver shall from time to time, and ot all tunes so long as he shall continue as receiver duly and faithfully in all respects discharge the duties and obligations which devolve upon him and duly pass his accounts, then the bond shall be paid but otherwise it will remain in full force (6)

If the receiver faithfully discharges his duties and passes his accounts ond pays the balance due by him the surety is discharged, and he is at liberty te ouply to have the recognizance vocated as to him Should this be not so, on action must be brought on his bond ogainst the surety who is onswerable te the extent of the emount of the recognizance for whatever sum of money, whether principal interest, or costs the receiver has become liable for, including the costs of his removal, and of the oppointment of a new receiver in his place In ascertaining the liability of the surety the Court proceeds upon the principle that the surety is hable (to the extent of the emount of the penalty) for all sums of money which the receiver himself was properly liable to pay into Court or occount for (7)

A surety who has been compelled to pay money on account of his obligation is entitled to he reimbursed out of the balance in the receiver's hands Lord Eldon saying 'As the receiver is an officer of the Court and the surety is so in a sense, if there is anything due on account between them justice requires that, upon the application of the surety, he shall be indemnified for what he has gaid for the receiver out of the balance due him '(8) And a surety who pays the debt of his principal has the same right against his eo surety that he has against the principal, and will be permitted to put the bond in suit as against the eo surety (9)

ORDER XLL

Appeals from Original Decrees

(1) Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a is memorandum signed by the appellant or his Form of appeal. What to accompany memoranpleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the Appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded

(2) The memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the Contents of memorandecree appealed from without any argument or narrative, and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Memorandum of appeal - The Appellate Court must look at the memo andum of appeal itself and not at the stamp on it in order to see which part of a decree is the subject of appeal before it. The Court can no more deal with part of a decree which is not chillenged by a memorandum of appeal or by objections filed by the opposite party than it can pass an order reveraing the decree of a first Court when that decree is not in appeal before it. The memo random of appeal or objections when filed are what give the Judge on appeal purisdiction to interfere with the decree below. He cannot of his own motion deal with a decice which is not the subject of appeal to him or with a portion of a decree against which portion there has been no appeal and no objections filed. The appellate Court has no purisdiction to deal with that portion of the decree which is not the subject of appeal before it (1). The Lode does not make iny provision is to how Courts should deal with memorand; of appeal con taining scandalous matter but Courts possess inherent power to stop such in buse of its records (2)

"Presented "- In order to effect a valid presentation of an appeal it must be by the suitor in person or by a person duly qualified to present it,(3) and where an advocate or vikil is heard the grounds should have been duly certified (1) Though in the valadatnama filed in the Court below the names of two vikils were entered, and though the takalatnama was accepted only by one of them yet the presentation of the appeal by the pleader, who accepted the rakalatnama, was considered a sufficient presentation (2) But where by an over sight the name of the valid who had filed an appeal was omitted from the body of his vakalatnama, it was held, on objection taken by the respondents, that the document was invalid and the appeal had not been properly presented (3) If an appeal, being in reality a first appeal from a decree, is erroneously described as "First appeal from order" in the memorandum of appeal, and it is shown that neither respondent was in any way prejudiced by such misdescription or an insufficient stamp was placed on the memorandum by reason thereof, the appeal should not be dismissed for such misdescription (4) It has been held that there is no proper presentation when the court fees due have not been paid, (5) but as regards subsequent affixing not having retrospective effect the first set of cases were decided before the enactment of sect 582A of the last Code (see now sect 119), which was intended to cover cases where the msufficiency of the stamp upon the memorandum of appeal was due to mistake (6)

"Accompanied by a copy of the decree "—In appeals against dicrees in suits or proceedings tantamount to a suit (e.g. contentious prolate proceedings) it is necessary that the memoraidinm of appeal should be accompanied by copy of the decree and a copy of the decree is a necessary accompanient for a valid appeal (7). The Court has no power to exempt an appellant from production of a copy of the decree, but (if satisfied that the discretion vested in it under sect. 5 of the Limitation Act should be excreised) it may make an order that a certified copy of the decree may be received and allowed to be attached to the memorandum of appeal (8). But in cases of appeals against orders under sect. 211 (now sect. 17) (which are decrees under ect. 2) it is sufficient to attach to the memorandum a copy of the order itself (which is the decree and no other decree is necessary) and it is not necessary to attach a copy of the decree even if such a decree may have been drawn in (3). The provisions of this rule, as extended to second appeals by sect. 103 do not require that any are set out by reason of the fact that they raise a new case or points not the subject of determination in the lower Court Generally speaking, in these eases pure points of law only are arguable which arise on the findings and require no further inquiry This subject will be found discussed under the heading "Scope of the appeal" in the notes to sects 100 and 101, ante This rule is equally applicable to second as to first appeals (1)

Grounds of appeal must be such as arise from out of the plaintiff's pleadings and documentary proofs and necessary to the decision of the appeal (2) In drawing up grounds of appeal it should (it has been held) be remembered that no subsequent event or devolution of interest can effect the decision of a question as it stood at the time the decision was pronounced. To give effect to these, some supplementary proceeding and not an appeal is necessary (3) Points not taken in the memorandum of appeal, if they raise questions of fact, upon which the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal must be taken to be cou clusive, will not be allowed to be taken in special appeal (4)

If the appellant thinks that his grounds of appeal in the memorandum filed with the Judge are not sufficient, he may apply to the Judge to allow him to be heard upon the objections not mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, but if he does not do so, nor does he even make the objections upon which he relies before the High Courts previously to his appealing to that Court, he cannot isk the High Court to reverso the decision of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court because he did not reverse the decision of the first Court on grounds which were never mentioned in appeal, or not brought to the notice of the Judgo of the Lower Appellate Court (5) The Court, however, itself is not limited by the grounds of objection It is entirely within the competency of the Court to take into its consideration anything in the case which either affects the regularity of the preceedings of the Court below, or relates to the correctness of the decision upon the ments, and the Court is not confined to the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal (6) This rule confers upon Courts power to deedle appeals upon grounds other than those set forth by the appellant in the memo andum, and that power is to be exercised by the Court alone, and not to enable the appellant to take the respondent by surprise by urging matters of which he had no notice Parties, however, complaining of judgments and decrees must mention all the grounds of complaint in the memorandum of appeal, and the e provisions are not meant to relieve them of such necessity (7) As a rule the High Court will not permit grounds of appeal to be taken in argument which have not been taken in the memorandum of appeal, but where a decree comes before it which upon its very face is illegal- a decree which goes beyon! the power of the Court which passed it—the High Court is bound to take up the point itself and rectify the mistike, and not to allow itself to become an

Where a Lower Appellate Court allowed an appellant (one of the defendants intere ted in a small portion of the decreet to ruse an objection verbally (and not tallen in the memoran lum of appeal) to the whole of the decree and dismis ed the suit on the ground of non toimler of parties at was held by the High Court that it was not onen to the Judge upon the appeal of only one of the defendants as to a small portion of the decree to cutertain the objection upon which he had thrown out the suit (3) When a Lower Appellate Court dismissed a suit on a point on which no issue was rused although it had been taken in the written statement, and which was not made a ground of appeal. It was held by the High Court that the name must be considered to have been abandoned at the trial . it was therefore not open to the Lower Appellate Court to dismiss the suit on that ground (4) may be rejected or amended (1) But the time for rejection is when the appeal is presented, and not after it has been once admitted (2) The filing of an appeal out of time is another matter. The registration is a ministerial proceeding And when registered out of time, the Court may, on discovery, reject it (3) where there is fraud, misrepresentation, suppression of fact, or mistake (4) An order admitting an appeal after time, made ex parte by a single Judge of the High Court sitting to receive applications for the admission of appeals under a rule of the Court made under 24 & 25 Viet e 101, sect 13, and seet 27 of the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court, can be impugned and set aside, at the hearing by the Division Court before which it is brought for hearing, on the ground that the reasons assigned for admitting it were erroneous and inadequate (5) The High Court in special appeals can look into the grounds which the Lower Appellate Court Judge has given for admitting the appeal in which the decision appealed against was passed after the lapse of the period of limitation, and the grounds upon which he acted in so admitting the appeal are impeachable in special appeal (6) The discretion of the Lower Appellate Court in such cases is liable to review or appeal where such Court is acting through caprico or prejudice, or where the discretion is exercised without any proper legal material to support it Where the exercise of discretion is perverse, the High Court in second appeal will interfere (7)

4 Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants on of the real plaintiffs or defendants may obtain reversal of whole decree where it proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be.

Decree proceeding on common ground.—The ordinary rule is that upon in appeal of one of several parties, an Appellate Court cannot reverse the decreappealed from as 1,5 met any other of the parties, (8) nor can the Appellate Court, on the appeal of one defendant, having only a part interest in a decrereverse the entire decree (9). and making a non appealing defendant a respondent, between themselves, to open out that nortion of the ease which, as between the plaintiff and the non appealing defendant, has not been appealed against, and when the ground on which the decision is given is not common to all the defendants this rule does not apply (1) But when the decision of the first Court proceeds on grounds common to all the defendants, one of the defendants is justified in appealing on behalf of all (2) Thus where, on the angual of one of the several andgmentdebtors, the bond on which the plaintiff sued was found to be false and not binding at all, all the other parties to the bond were released notwithstanding that they did not appeal (3) It is meongruous that a claim should be dismissed as against one party and allowed against another on contradictory grounds, as say, in the first case, on the ground that a mortgage is satisfied, and in the second on the ground that the mortgage had not been discharged. It is to prevent such incongruites that power is conferred when an appeal is presented against the whole deeree to interfere as well on belalf of parties who have not appealed as on behalf of those who have appealed (4) No distinction is made between decrees ex parte and others (5) Where there is a common ground amonast plantiffs or defeudants an appeal by one is virtually an appeal by all, though they may not be parties to the record (6) It is not directed that the Appellato Court should pass a decree in favour of persons who are not before it in appeal. but the effect of the provision is to make a decree passed in favour of one out of the defendants or plaintiffs operate in fix our of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be (7) The decree which may be the subject of such anneal 14 one affecting in the same manner all the plaintiffs and defendants -- one in capable of division and upon which it would be impossible for a Court to find in one sense for some of the plaintiffs or defendants and in the opposite sense for the other plaintiffs or defendants, for instance where the suit relates to property in which all the plaintiffs or all the defendants are co charers (8) If one of tho several defendants appeal not against the whole decree but only against that portion of it which affects him and his defence in the Lower Court was not a defence common to other defendants, the Lower Court deerce cannot be reversed in favour of those defendants who have not appealed (9) In a recent case where a lambardar had appealed against a decree without joining his codefendants (his tenants) it was held that under this rule it was open to him to obtain a reversal of the decree in favour of all the defendants, but the plaintiffs were bound to join all the defendants as respondents in a second appeal (1)

What is a common ground must be determined in each case upon the nature of the decree given, and the cases cited are given in illustration only of the general principle enacted (2)

The Calcutta High Court has held, (3) dissenting in this from a Madras descention, subsequently overruled, (4) that the former section did not require that the decree appealed against should proceed exclusively on grounds common to all the defendants, but that it should proceed on any ground common to the defendants Under this rule, one of several persons who have stood on a common ground may appeal for all They are not prevented from appealing severally if they wish to do so, but if they allow one of their number to represent them for plessing their appeal, they must accept his representative character as to the incidents also of the appeal, at least so far as the juril relation between the parties are concerned. The appeal opens up the whole case, though made by but one of the joint parties in the Court below But the case being thus opened up, it is opened up for the respondent as well as for the appellant, and under the former sect 561 (now O XLI r 22) the respondent may press any objection against the decree which he could have urged in an independent appeal a decree of the Court of the first instance is partly in favour of two joint plaintiffs, and one plaintiff appeals, the Appellate Court may reject the whole claim on the cross objection of the defendant, (5) the decree having been passed against the defendants, it was open to any one of them to appeal against it if the ground of appeal was common to all the defendants (6) But where there are several respondents before the Court of first appeal, though one of them may represent his fellows in a further appeal, he cannot represent a person who was not his co respondent and against whom therefore no decree could have been made on a point common to the two, or on any point at all (1)

It was held that the former section applied only to appeals by parties arrayed on the same side of a litigation in the original Court and against whom judgment on a common ground had been passed, and only some of them appeal from such judgment on behalf of themselves and others who do not join in the appeal. It did not relate to eases in which a party (be he a plaintiff or a defen dint in the original Court) who has been unsuccessful only to a certain extent of the subject matter of the litigation in appeal from so much of the decree as has been passed against hun, happens to value the appeal as if it related to the whole subject matter of the litigation or to pay Court fees on such amount (2) Where two suits brought by two different parties claiming different interests in a certain share to set aside the sale of that share, having been dismissed one of the plaintiffs appealed and the sale was set uside, it was held that the decision must be considered as setting the sale aside as to the whole of that share although the other parties did not appeal. If they both had somed in one suit but only one had appealed, the decree of the Appellate Court would have been for tho benefit of both and the whole sale would have been set aside. Their bringing separate suits instead of joining in one suit ought not to make any difference in that respect (3)

It was held that where a respondent fuled to give the notice required by cells toll of the former Code (see r. 22 of this Order) it was not open to the Appellate Court to great any relief to that respondent in a case where the granting or such relief was not necessarily modernal to the relief granted to the party who had appealed (4). But see now in this connection r. 33 of this Order, which enacts part of 0.58 r. 4 of the English Rules.

Stay of proceedings and of execution

5 (1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings is stay by Appellate under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the Appellate Court may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree, but the Appellate Court may for sufficient cause order stay of execut on of such decree

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of stay by court which an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may on sufficient cause being shown order the execution to be stayed

- (3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) unless the Court making it is satisfied—
 - (a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made,(b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay and

(c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-rule (3), the Court may make an ex-parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application

"Stay of execution "—This rule, which refers to applications by parties only,(1) assumes that there is something to stay and therefore does not apply where the decree has been in fact executed (2). To execute a judgment of order is to carry it into effect or enforce it. When there still remains something substantial to be done under a decree, before it can become thoroughly effectival that decree has to be "executed" within the meaning of this rule (3). So a decree directing the issue of a grant of probate to the propounder of a will some that is capable of execution, and stay of execution of such decree can be granted under it (1). It was held that seet 2-3 of the former Code did not constitute an exception to the procedure land down by seet 515 now replaced by this rule (5).

The principle upon which all stay is granted for the pre-cryation of property pending hitgation is that the successful pirty in the hitgation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to resp the fruits of the hitgation and not to obtain merely a burier succes (6). In cases where a stay of execution or in injunction is granted on in expaire application liberty to apply to the dialgetor for or set aside the order must be implied if not expressed (7). And a court which has jurisdiction to pass in order has equally prisalicion to pass in my matter though from in latticilly in lance sands in ingout of the first arder (8). The ruling that if preperty is old before in order staying execution is commitmented, the aleas in such execution role (1).

has been discented from (I) the order of stay taking effect when it is made of I not when it is communicated. It has been said that an applicant who has osked for stay of execution should on the ground of its being an indulgence be made to pay costs even if successful (2). But this has been discented from (3) and there is exitainly strong support in reason for the view that when the law allows an apport and allows an appoint upon proper cause being shown to said, it and obtain an order for stay, it cannot be said that what is asked for is merely an indulgence.

By Court of first Instance.—The rule assumes that the decree is appealible and not unal (t). If an appeal lies, but has not been filed, the first Court but no other (5) may stay execution upon an application made before the expiry of the period of appeal, though as the rule states the successing party is not upossibilited from executing his decree simply on the ground that the period for appealing has not expired (6). The Court which dismisses a suit becomes functus efficies save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs (7). After appeal its field the Appellate Court, as the Court which has sexin of the suit, may stay execution (5). A Civil Court enhot stay execution in cases in which in appeal has been made to the Pricy Council against a decree of the likeh Court (9).

"Sufficient cause"—The application should be supported by an affidavit verticing the facts alleged, and these facts should show sufficient cause for in six (10). What constitutes sufficient cause must depend upon the facts of the particular case (11). In this connection the proviso to the rule must be referred to. The Court is given a discretion in the matter, and may refuse the application where there has been such diday is discritifes the party to any consideration from the Court (12). And see post. The provisions of this rule as regards the exhibition of sufficient cause apply, equally to decreas for immoveable as for moveable property (13).

Notice -Though there was no express provision as to notice under the last Code it was the practice to give notice to the decree holder before disposing finally of an application for stay of execution (3) And this will probably be so in the generality of cases now though not statutorily required unless the case falls within the fourth clause

Security -The taking of security is compulsory (4) The nature and extent of the liability depends on the words of the security bond given to the Court (5) The rule refers to the ultimate order, and therefore the obligation extends to the final decree passed after remand by the High Court in second appeal (6) The amount, of course, is determinable by the special circumstances When proceedings are ordered to be stayed on giving security the judgment debtor must be allowed reasonable opportunity to show that the security offered is sufficient (7) This clause does not contemplate a decree or order in a separate proceeding to be instituted in the future (8) The relationship between a decree holder and judgment debtor who has executed a security bond mortgaging property is not such as to be governed by seet 67 of the Transfer of Property Let and a suit is not necessary (9) In the case of third parties, the Bombav High Court has held (10) that payment by a surety may be enforced by summary process in execution The Calcutta High Court has considered a suit necessary (11) The former view has now been adopted in sect 115 ante. In the under mentioned case the Court directed that excention should be first tal en against the judgment debtor and then the surety (12) When property is deposited in Court in hen of security for the purpose of staying a sile and the order directing the sale is confirmed on appeal, neither the depositor nor judgment debtor can claim to have the deposit restored which is then held for the decree holder (13) 15 to appeal see next paragraph. Stay by Appellate Court -An appeal must be pending A Court has no power after the passing of a final unappealable decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree (5) In the decision cited, (6) it was held that where an incidental decree under sect 244 (now 47) is under appeal, the Court may stay execution of the substantive or original decree in the suit peuding the hearing of the appeal, though such original decree is itself not under appeal See now r 8, post The manner in which au Appellate Court effects a stry is either on appeal from an order of the Court of first instance refusing a stay, for such an order when made hy a High Court is a "judgment' under the Letters Patent (7) and when made by other Courts is one falling within sect 244 (now sect 47) ante, (8) provided that the Court against which the appeal is made is the Court executing the decree within the meaning of that section, (9) or after an appeal has been filed an original application may be made direct to the Appellate Court (10) But the Appellate Court must have acquired seizin either of the original suit or of the execution proceedings. in favour of a plaintiff, it should not stay execution of its own decree, for in such case a plaintiff having lost his decree is in no hetter position until his special appeal is decided than a plaintiff before judgment (1). When an Appellate Court refuses an application for stay, this does not prevent an application under sect 546 (now r. 6), should an order for execution be obtained (2)

The Court has inherent powers of stay beyond those given by statute. There is an inherent power in the Court to stay under proper circumstances the drawing up of its own order or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require, (3) or to stay proceedings in the Lower Court—such power being auxiliary to that of the Appellate Court to reverse the order of the Inferior Court (4) And when an appeal is pending against a preliminary order directing an account, the Court having seizm of the appeal can, apart from the question whether the case falls within the Code, make an order staying the carrying out of such order pending the hearing of the appeal (3)

Appeal.—An order refusing stay of execution made by a Court which is not executing the decree is not appealable (6)

Security in case of order to recention of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be taken for the restriction of any property which may be or has been taken in execution of the decree or for the payment of the value of such property and for the due performance of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the payment that the restriction of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the present the decree to take such security.

effect, direct that it be cancelled and returned. For the power to take security involves the other (1) But a Subordmate Court has no jurisdiction to release a security taken under the directions of the High Court (2) Where by order of an Appellate Court a security-bond was executed by the judgment debtor for stay of execution of a decree pending the decision of an appeal under sect. 515 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) and after the disposal of the appeal the decree holder applied for sale of the property under the subsisting attachment, it was held that the sale could be carried out in execution-proceedings consequent on the attachment (3) A security bond under this rule pledging immoveable property exceeding Rs 100 in value requires registration (4)

Stay by Appellate Court -- An appeal must be pending A Court has no power after the passing of a final unappealable decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree (5) In the decision cited (6) it was held that where an meidental decree under sect 241 (now 47) is under appeal, the Court may stay execution of the substantive or original decree in the suit pending the hearing of the appeal, though such original decree is itself not under appeal See now r S, post The manner in which an Appellate Court effects a stay is either on appeal from an order of the Court of first instance refusing a stay, for such an order when made by a High Court is a 'judgment under the Letters Patent, (7) and when made by other Courts is one falling within sect 244 (now sect 17) ante, (8) provided that the Court against which the appeal is made is the Court executing the decree within the meaning of that section, (9) or after an appeal has been filed an original application may be made direct to the Appellate Court (10) But the Appellate Court must have acquired seizin either of the original suit or of the execution-proceedings. It was therefore held that the High Court was not competent to stay proceedings in execution of a decree of a Subordinate Court merely by reason of an appeal having been preferred against an order of refusil to set aside the decree under sect 108 of the former Code, corresponding with O IX r 13 of this Code (11) A Superior Court has no power to direct a Subordinate Court to stay execution in a case which is not before it (12) When an Appellate Court reverses a decree

Appellate Court may in its discretion, either paguire appellant to furnish security for costs.

Appellate Court may in its discretion, either paguire appellant to furnish security for costs.

Appellate Court may in its discretion, either paguire appellant is called upon to appear to and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both:

Provided that the Court shall demand such security in all Where appellant resides cases in which the appellant is residing out out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property (if any) to which the appeal relates

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time

as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal

Object of rule —This rule was nover intended by the Legislature to derogate from the right of appeal given by the law to every person who is defeated in a suit in the Court of first instance (2). Its object is to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to meur further costs which he ringht never succeed in recovering from the appellant (3). The fourth paragraph of the former section which was one of procedure only, (4) and dealt with summary proceedings in execution against the surety has been omitted. The matter is covered by section 145 ante (5).

"The Appellate Gourt."—This rule applies, it has been held, only to appeals preferred to the High Court from subordunate Courts subject to its appellate jurnsdiction, and not to appeals preferred to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of one of its own Judges, (6) and does not apply to appeals from the orders of a Judge sitting as a commissioner of the Insolvent Court, (7) the right of appeal in such cases being given by sect 73 of the Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Viet c 21) It is applicable to an appeal from an order under sect 244 (now sect 47) (8).

of the party complained of, in not paying the costs ordered to be paid, is vexations (1)

Form of order —An order for security for costs should follow the words of the rule, and should not specify the particular amount in rupecs for which security should be given. It would be a good order under the rule if it directed the appellant to furnish the security within a time to be stited "for the costs of the appeal" or "for the costs of the original suit". To hold that the order must specify the amount in rupees of costs for which security should be given would either be to fustrate the intention of the Legislature in framing the section, or to make the order a purely speculative order. The object of the rule is that the respondent at the carliest moment which suits him should take the advantage of the rule, and at that time it would be impossible for the respondent, the appellint, or the Court to say what might be the costs of the appeal. The last paragraph of the former section was said to point to the security being for an indefinite and not for a definite amount. An order specifying the amount would not be a bid order, but the better practice is that the amount should not be specified in the order (2)

"Within such time."—The application to the Court to enling the time for giving security may be made either before or lifer the expurition of the time within which the security has been ordered to be familyhed, and the Court may thereupon callage the time according to any necessity which may arise where it is just and proper that it should do so. If ultimately the order is not complied with, and the security is not family the appeal may be rejected (d) It cannot be had down as a hard and fast rule that the Court can in no case, after the time for giving security is passed, allow the appellant further time for giving security. Thus principle has now been adopted in sect. 118, ante. Though the Court may extend the time for farmishing the security demanded after the time allowed by the order has elapsed it will not do so unless on good grounds (5).

"Shall reject."—The Code empowers the Appellate Court to demand scentry, and directs that Court to reject the appeal if the scentry is not furnt hed within the time the Court orders. To justify the rejection of the appeal there must have been a demand on the part of the Court. The issue of a peclanian is notice to show cause as not tant mount to a demand. It simply informs the appeal int that the Court proposes to consider the propriety of demanding scenarios from him, and offers him the opportunity of showing cause to the contrary. Court is not bound by the Code to issue such a notice, though in practice it would generally be improper to make an order for security without affording the appellant the opportunity of contesting it. Where such notice is given the appellant is not bound to appear. He may allow the application to be decided in his ib cuce. If he does not appear and the order is not made in his presence. he must have due notice of it to constitute a demand. The order directing the appellant to furnish security must be served either on him or on his vakil It would be unreasonable to hold that he was in contempt or disobedience of an order which had not been communicated to him (1) Conflicting opinious have been expressed upon the question whether when the appellant has not given security for costs, the respondent should apply specially to have the appeal rejected or whether it is sufficient for him to object at the hearing of the appeal for non compliance with the order (2) An appeal, though rejected may on sufficient grounds be restored (3) No appeal is given from an order for security for costs It has been held, therefore, that it could not have been munded that the order for security which was numpeealable might be questioned by au appeal from the act of the Court compulsordy done under the rule on security not being given as ordered. An order, therefore rejecting an appeal under this rule is not a decree and is not appealable as such (4) nor as an order (5) and a judgment and decree should be drawn up in the usual manner. It has been held that in discussing in appeal under this rule a District Judge is not relieved from the necessity of writing a judgment, however short, showing the points raised, the decision thereon, and the reasons therefor (1) But it is not the practice of the Calcutta High Court to draw up decrees under this rule (2) And the Allahabad High Court has held that it is not obligators upon the lower Appellate Court to write a judgment in such cases (3) But a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a lower Appellate Court must write its judgment (as provided by Bombay Civil Circular 51), when it dismisses an appeal under this rule (4) The order of dismissal under this rule is a decree and not merely a refusal to entertum the appeal, and so far as it is a final adjudication there is no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under this rule and in appeal dismissed after full hearing (5) Where an appeal is dismissed under this rule, the effect of the dismissal is to affirm the decree appealed against, which becomes merged in the decree of dismissal of the Appellate Court When, therefore, an appeal has been dismissed under this rule the Court which made the decree appealed against his no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree (6) scuse. Where there has been no "appearance" the rule applies. But when there has been an "appearance" it does not (1) The question, however, has ariseu as to what constitutes an appearance within the meaning of the rule.

"Appearance" has several meanings, and these must be understood in reference to the particular subject to which it relates, and the purpose or end to be answered by the appearance has an important bearing in determining what is sufficient to constitute an appearance in a particular case. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (2) has recently ruled that an application by counsel or pleader who is instructed only to apply for an adjournment, which is refused, is not an "appearance," and that when m such circumstance an appeal is dismissed, the dismissal is one for default under this rule entitling the appellant to apply for re-admission under r 19 The decisions are not altogether uniform, but the balance of authority in the Bombay (3) and Allahabad (1) High Courts is m favour of the same view, which has also been taken by the Punjab Chief Court (5) Where, however, a pleader for the appellant appeared and asked for an adjournment but did not withdraw from the case, merely urging that the records were in possession of his leader who was absent, and that he could not argue the appeal, but the application for adjournment was not granted, it was held by the Madias High Court that it was open to the Court to refuse the adjournment, but that if it did so it was bound to write a judgment and dispose of the appeal, and could not dismiss it for default (6) But the Madras High Court has recently held that where the pleader was instructed only to apply for an adjournment and was not duly instructed and ablo to answer all material questions relating to the suit, nor accompanied by any one able to answer such questions, there was no appearance by the defendant (7) When the appellant and his pleaders were present when the appeal was called ou for hearing, and one of the pleaders addressed the Court, but soon after the commencement of his argument, went to another Court and did not return, and the other pleader refused to address the Court, the appeal, it was held, should be dismissed, but not for default (8) If the appellant, in a case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court, does not put in an appearance and takes no steps to produce cyclence, the Lower Appellate Court may dismiss the appeal for default (9) Where there were two appeals

by the same appellant before the Court and he was summoned to give evidence in one of them, but failed to attend, judgment, it was held, could not be given against lum for default in the other appeal (1)

"Be dismissed"—The Court, in the absence of the appellant on the day fixed for hearing, should dismiss the uppeal and not reverse the judgment of the lower Court (2). If a Judge, instead of dismissing the appeal for non appearance of the appellant in person or hy pleader, goes into the merits of the case and gives judgment against the appellant, the appeal must be considered as dismissed for default of the appeal annot be treated as one for review it is improper to consider or decide upon the merits of a case when the Judge has no opportunity of hearing what the appellant has to say in support of it (3). It is illegal to try an appeal on the merits in such a case, and the judgment given in this way is a nullity and must be cauciled, and its existence is no bar to the admission of the appeal (4). The amended rule now says the Court may make an order of dismissel. The former section ran "shall be dismissed." (5)

Appeal — In order dismissing an appeal from a decree for default, (6) or dismissing objections to the execution of a decree for default, (7) was formerly held to be a decree within the meaning of sect 2 of the last Code and thus appeal table. "To the Appellate Gourt"—The application must be made to the Court dismissing the appeal (2) If an appeal is referred by a District Judge to an assistant Judge for trial, under seet 17 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (Act XIV of 1869), and the Assistant Judge dismisses the appeal for default, the application for readmission of the appeal should be made to him and not to the District Judge, and his order refusing to readmit the appeal is not subject to reversal or review by the District Judge (3) As to limitation in case of such an application, see case cited (4)

"Prevented "-This and the kindred provision in O IX i 13 mean that the application may be based upon any ground which would be a just and proper one for granting the application, and not that the application can be based upon one ground only, viz that the applicant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. The affirmative provisions of the Code that a plaintiff or appellant may prove that he was " prevented hy sufficient cause ' from appearing or attending when his suit or appeal was colled on and dismissed, do not imply the negative, namely, that an application for restoration cannot be granted unless "sufficient cause (in this sense) is shown " (5) It has been recently held that a Court has power to restore an appeal dismissed for default even where the appellant is not able to prove that he was prevented by a sufficient cause from appearing, and that the Court is not bound to restore an appeal in every case where the non appearance is due to the pleader's negligence, but may in its discretion leave him to his remedy against the pleader by an action for damages (6) The Court is bound to see whether the reasons set forth in the application for the re admission of the appeal are satisfactors or not Thus, where the Lower Appellate Court refused an application for readmission merely because the appellant had not conformed to a rule which he had passed that two pleaders should be engaged in every appeal, the High Court sent back the case to the Judge to cousider whether a good ground had been shown for the re admission of the appeal (7) The reasons for rejecting the application should be stated (3) When an appeal was transferred from the file of one Court to another, no notice of the transfer having been given to the appellant by the pleaders in the case and the appeal was dismissed in his absence, held that sufficient ground for his absence had been made out (9) What, however, is "sufficient cause ' mu t be decided in each case according to its own peculiar circumstances

"From appearing"—Whether the application is made for restoration under this rule or O IX r 13 the same principle will apply In both cases the question is whether an appearance by a counsel or pleader instructed to apply only for an adjournment is an "appearance within the meaning of the Code, and whether in such a case the suit or appeal can be dismissed for default the first question I is been answered in the negative and the second in the affirmative (I). When an appeal is dismissed under such circumstances, the order of dismissal is for default and the appellant is entitled to apply for readmission of the appeal under this rule (2). Where an appeal is dismissed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper bool such a dismissed can be set aside by review Such a case is not one in which default was jurded in appearing at the hearing of the case if the record shows that the pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard. Under the Codo there are only two methods known to the law by which a independent and decree of a Divisional Bench of the III. Bourt can be t aside in In in. These two methods are described in these provisions and tho e relating to review. Where it appears from the record that pleaders on both alles were in attendance and heard there has been no default in appearing at the hearing of the case and therefore this rule will not apply (3)

Anneal.—The Code allows an appeal from an order refusing to grant an application under this rule for the restoration of an appeal. But it does not provide for an appeal from an order granting such an application (4) When however the order dismussing on appeal is not one which can properly be made under r 17 there is no appeal from an order refusing to readmit the appeal under this rule and the remedy in such a case is by revision. Thus in a casa when the appeal cams on for hearing the appellant himself and two pleaders on he helialf were present in the Lower Appellate Court, one of the pleaders oneped the case but in a short time was called away to attend to a case before another Court and the Lower Appellate Court waiting some little time for the pleader to return called upon the other pleader and the appellant to support the appeal and when each of them declared his mability to do so dismissed the appeal for the default of prosecution The then appellant applied for the restoration of the appeal which was refused on the ground that no sufficient cause was shown for the restoration. The appellant appealed to the High Court under this rule It was dismissed on the ground that the appeal in the Lower Appellate Court was not dismissed for default but the appellant was allowed to file an application for revi ion (a) When an application for restoration

Where it appears to the Court at the hearing that any persons who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is mefeired, but who has not heen made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal, the Court may adjourn the hearing to a future day to be fixed by the Court and direct that such person be made a respondent.

Adding respondent.-The power of the Court to act under this rule is only limited in two respects, first, the person whom the Court may add must have been a party to the auit, and secondly, he must be a person interested in the result of the appeal There is no period of limitation specified in the Limitation Act, for the action of the Court in that matter (2) The party added must be interested in the result of the appeal Whether this be so must be determined in each case on its facts (3) In a suit for contribution the first Court give a decree against one of the defendants and dismissed it against the other On appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the lower appeal Court having, at the hearing of the appeal, found that the defendants, against whom the suit was dismissed, were not made parties to the appeal, though interested in the result of the appeal, directed that they should be made parties, and they entered appearance in accordance with the order made Held that there was nothing wrong in the lower appeal Courts making them respondents and passing a decree against them (4) An Appellate Court is competent to make a person a respondent who in the original suit was arrayed on the same side with the appellant (5) In a suit for contribution, where there was a decree against defendants Nos 1 and 3 separately, and the suit was dismissed against defendant No 2 on appeal by defendant No 1, there being no appeal by the plaintiff,

Rehearing of appeal,-After an appeal is filed the power to set aside the original decree on an application under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) is vested m the Appellate Court This power is distinct from the power to set aside an ex parte appellate deerce conferred by the present rule, which only enables the Court to direct the appeal from the original decree to be reheard, thus temporarily restoring the original decree (5) No appeal has to the High Court under sect 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from an order refusing to hear an application under this rule to have an appeal from a decree in a rent suit, valued less than Rs 100, reheard in the presence of the respondent (6) An application to rehear the appeal is an application in the suit (7)

Scope of rule -In this rule two classes of cases have been referred to under it a respondent may, firstly support the decree of the Court of first instance upon grounds which may have been decided against him by that Court, and if a part of the decree is adverse to him he has the right to object at the hearing of the uppeal to that put of the decree without filing a separate appeal two classes of cases are not of an analogous character Cross objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree which is partly unfavourable to him (1) A respondent, when the decree is against him, cannot (unless he has filed a cross appeal) be heard except to support the decree, and can only alter it by means of a cross appeal (2) A party may be satisfied with the decree of the Lower Court, and may be willing to allow it to stand unumperched if his opponent does not think it necessary to appeal; but he may not be willing to have the decree modified or altered upon appeal in favour of his opponent, without having the whole decree set right suppose a defendant sets up two defences to a claim brought against him, and the Lower Court determines in his favour as to one of them and against him as

The Lower Court might be wrong as to both defences and on ht to have decided in the defendant's far our the defence which was deaded against him and occurrent. If the plaintiff were to appeal and to rever a the decision of the Lower Court, upon the defence decreed in the defendant's favour at would be unjust not to allow the defendant, if he could, to show that the Lower Court was wrong in point of law in determining the other defence against him, for he might thereby be able to show that the Lower Court was substantially right in dismissing the plantiff's suit, though wrong as to the defence which larred it (1) He may support the decree on the _round decided as unst him This reason applies to special appeals with as much force as it does to regular appeals (2) It was held that the order of a Loner Appellate Court di allowing the objections filed by the respondent in that Court under sect 561, was appealable because it was a decree passed in appeal within the meaning of sect 581 of the list Code, whether it dealt with the grounds of appeal urged by the appellant or the objections taken by the respondent under sect 561 (3) It was also held that sect 617 of the last Code made applicable to revision petitions under sect 25 of the Provincial Small Causo Court Act, the procedure relating to appeals, and consequently a memorandum of objections would be in such revision petitions (1)

Decree entirely in favour of respondent.—Where a decree is entirely in favour of a respondent it is not necessary for him to file a notice of objection to the decision on any issue found against him. He can support the decree on the ground that that issue ought to have been decided in his favour. The Appellate Court ought to decide that issue or show in its judgment a reason for not doing as (3). "Decided against him."—If a point has not been decided in favour of the re-pondent it must for the purposes of the rule be taken to have been decided against him within its meaning. It is not necessary to entitle a re-pondent to support a decree upon a particular ground that that ground should have been in express terms decided against him (6). Where a claim to set off was asserted in the re-pondent's (defendant s) written statement, but no issue ou the point wis raised, and no pronouncement on it was made by the first Court, and it was not mude the subject of any cross objection, nor was it urged before the 'appellate Court in argument, the former section was keld to be no but to the 'appellate before the Calcutta High Court (I) it was decided that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co respondents (2) Thus where the Court of first instance decided a suit upon a ground common to all the defendants, it was held it was competent for the Appellate Court, on the appeal of only one of the defendants, to modify or set aside in favour of all the defendants the decree of the Lower Court, and the whole case was opened out in appeal, not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant who had appealed, but also as between the plaintiff and other defendants, who had been made respondents apparently because they had not joined in the appeal. It was held that the Appellate Court could not do complete justice between all the parties without opening up the whole case, and such an instance was one of the exceptional cases in which a respondent should be allowed to prefer objections as against his co respondents (3) It was also held by the Madias High Court that one respondent can file a memorandum of objections against another respondent (4)

Court fees on cross-objections—The objections under this rule have to be mide by means of a document which has to be filed within one month after service of notice of the appeal, that is, on a date which is generally long prior to the date of hearing. Is that document chargeable with court fees at the time it is filed? Under sect 4, Court Fees Act, it is not so chargeable unless it is a document of any of the kinds specified in the first or second Schedule annexed to the Act. A memorandum of objections is not a document so specified in those schedules. Such being the ease, no fee is leviable on a memorandum of objections until the time of heaving, and it is leviable under the special provision in sect. 16 of the Court Fees Act (5). The Court cannot remit the stamp duty in such cases, (6) the proper order is to dismiss the memorandum (with or without costs, at the discretion of the Court) (7).

"Within one month."—This rule allows a respondent to file a memorandum of objections within one month from the date on which notice has been excred on him or on his pleader. The right so confirm dis an absolute right, and the hearing of the appeal cannot be advanced so as to defeat this provision. An appeal cannot be definitely posted until the Contr has ascertained that notice of the appeal his been served on the respondent, and in date should then be fixed not less than one month from the date of service (1). The Court may grant further time. Whether it will do so will depend on the particular facts proved (2). Under this rule the Court has power to receive a memorandum of cross-objections at any time (3).

Withdrawal of appeal (sub-rule (4)).-Cross objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree partly unfavourable to han, but they were considered to so far differ from a cro-s-appeal that they depended on the hearing of the appeal, and could not be heard if the appeal was not heard. Upon this view a number of questions arose as to the effect of the withdrawal of in appeal before and after the commencement of the hearing, and what constituted a hearing upon the right to have cross objections heard and determined (1) The general result of these decisions may be stated to be that they involved a discussion of the meining of the term "hearing," that if the appeal was withdrawn before the "hearing" the respondent could not be heard upon his cross objections dependent as they were on the appeal, but that if the hearing had begun and the Court had thus become reized of the cross objections the respondent could not be deprived of his remedy because the appellant choose to abandon his (5) The matter need not now be further considered. An appellant may of course withdraw his appeal nt any time up to its actual decision (6) But now under sub rule (4) in all cases of withdrawal the Court may proceed to determine the cross objections Where, however, the decree is wholly in favour of the respondent his right to contest any of the conclusions in the first Court judgment is only for the purpose of supporting the decree, and if the appeal is withdrawn that purpose is fully secured because the decree is left standing and the right to dispute the conclusions in the judgment is no longer of any use to hun. To withdraw the appeal in such a case cannot, as in the case of cross objections deprive the respondent of any remedy whatever (1) Sub rule (4) is therefore limited to cross objections. A question also arose as to whether, when an appeal was abandoned, and the respondent could not proceed with his objections to the decree, he could file an appeal, after the expiry of time allowed for appeal by the Limitation Act, under sect 5 of that Act. It was held that the mere fact that an appeal has been withdrawn did not amount to "sufficient cause" within that section. But each case had to be decided upon its own special encumstances. If the Court was satisfied in any case that there had been "sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the preserved time," then it would allow the appeal to be admitted (2). For the reason given such a case is not likely to recur, as there is no necessity to file an appeal if the appeal covers only the ground of the cross objections which can now be determined when the appeal is abandoned

Remand —Where the Lower Court has taken evidence sufficiently to chable the Appellate Court in its view of the case to pronounce judgment, then the latter Court must determine the case whether the Lower Court has or has not fixed the proper issues. In such case it has all the muterials necessary to the exercise of its judgment, and if the proper issues have not been fixed, it may resettle the issues under r 24 Cases may, however, occur where the Court has not such material

The first case is where there has been no complete determination of the suit by reason of the Court's erroneous disposal of the case on 1 "preliminary point" Such an order of remand implies a reversal of the first judgment (3) and re opens the whole case, (4) and involves a second decision by the Lower Court, that is, the Court which first disposed of the suit and no other (5) This is a complete remand. As already stated a complete remand involves a reversal of the first judgment. Where the first Court disposes of the suit on two grounds only, res judicata and limit tion, and on appeal its decision was upheld only on the first ground and the question of limitation was not gone into, in second appeal the High Court reversed the decision and remanded the case to the Lower Appellate Court to decide it on the ments. This was held to leave the whole case open to that Court, and before it could reverse the first Court's decree and remand the case for a first decision, it was bound to determine whether the fresh Court's decision on the question of limitation was right or wrong (1). It has been held that it is not a good ground for passing an order of remand under this rule to say that the preliminary issue has been decided by the Court of first instance on a wrong view of the burden of proof, unless the Appellate Court finds that such decision was wrong (2).

The next case is when the Lower Court has omitted to try an issue or to determine a question of fact essential to the right decision of the case set up in the first Court, and in consequence the evidence is misufficient (ir 25, 26). In such a case the decree is not set aside (3). The case is retained undeposed of on the file of the Appellate Court. The Lower Court is directed to take the additional evidence and to try on such evidence the issues remitted. When the his done this it returns the additional evidence with its finding thereon to the Appellate Court, which then being placed in a position to determine the appeal, passes judgment (4). In this case there is what has been called a partial remand. Where the Court of first instance has considered the whole of the evidence before it and completely disposed of the suit on the merits, the Appellate Court must itself finally determine the appeal and crunot remand, (5) but if it thinks that the determination of any particular question unincessary, it may make an order under 25 post (6)

The third case (which is not, properly speaking, a remaid) exists where the Lower Court has determined the whole case and has not cointed to frame or determine any issues but has deceded the ease on insufficient evidence (r. 27-29) In this case the Appellate Court itself takes the evidence or directs the Lower Court to do so and when such evidence is returned passes judgment in the appeal which, as in the former case, has meanwhile remained ou its file

An improper order of remand is not necessarily void but only illegal or irregular (7) Under the last Code an order under sect 562 was appealable,(1) and a party might impeach the order of remand on appeal from the final decree (2) Under sect 578 (now s 99), however, no decision should be reversed unless it has affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court But jurisdiction in this section is used in its strict sense, and does not mean the legal authority of a Court to do a certain thing, viz to order a remand, and therefore in each case it had to be determined whether the merits had been prejudicially affected (3) Under the present Code, however, an appeal is given from an order under this rule (O XLIII), and under sect 105, if an appeal lies and the party does not appeal, he cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the order of remand

When a case is remanded the Lower Court should fix a reasonable date for the parties to appear and carry on the suit, (4) and if they do not appear the case should be dismissed (5) If they appear no fresh valutuama is neces sary (6) When a case is remanded to a District Judge he should not transfer it to another officer (7) Costs of the Appellate Court can be recovered only when the order of remand provides for them (8) If on the return of the case it appears that the remand order has not been carried out, the Court, in remanding it a second time, chould point out the manner in which the carrying out of the provious order seemed defective (9) If a party who is offered a remand elects to go on with the case as it stands, ho is estopped from impugning the decision on that point (10) Where a case was remanded to be tried on the merits, the Court remanding considering it not barred, the Lower Court was held wrong in entering again into the question of limitation (11) For the Court cannot to open a matter already adjudicated upon between the parties (1) It has been held that when a case is sent back for trial on the merits the order of remand shuts out preliminary objections such as limitation or res adjudicata (2) or jurisdiction (3) On the other hand, it has been held that the remand of a case for trial on the merits does not prevent adjudication upon any other issue arising in the case of limitation, provided that such usue has not been adjudicated upon by the Court making the remand (1) The question whether sect 25 of the last Code, now sect. 21, had application to a ease remanded was considered in the case cited (a) It has been held that where the decision of the Court of first instance is not based on any preliminary ground and where the whole of the evidence has been taken and the conclusion of the Court relates to the merits of the case the Appellate Court cannot set aside the decree under this rule (6)

"Preliminary point."-Prior to the amendment of the Code of 1882 by Act VII of 1858 sect 562 contained the words "So as to exclude any cuidence of feet which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties" and the word "micetigate" was used instead of the word "determine" at the end of the section The condition therefore necessary to justify a remand consisted prior to Act VII of 1888 in the exclusion of evidence of a material fact or in the omission to investigate the merits as the consequence of the decision on a preliminary question which the Appellate Court could not unhold (7)

The condition necessary to a remand after 1888 was the omission to deter mine the merits. Therefore it was held competent for an Appellate Court to remand a case where the Court of first instance recorded evidence on all the issues and at the final hearing determined the suit erroneously on some particular point without expressing any opinion on the other issues (8) But there could be no remand where, though the Court held that the suit was barred by lumitation, it at the same time came to a definite decision on each of the other i-sucs (9)

It was held that the expression "preliminary point" was used in sect 562 of the last Code, not in the sense of some point collateral to the ments, e.g. limitation, res judicata, and the like, but of some point preliminary to a general investigation of the ments. The words referred thus to some point either collateral to the ments which precluded their determination altogether or some particular question which, though relating to the ments, precluded their general determination (1). The term is somewhat ambiguous. The meaning would appear to be that the Appellite Court may rimind where the Lower Court has disposed of a suit upon a point or issue, the determination of which has precluded the necessity for determining other points or issues have been left undetermined.

Sect 562 was held to authorize a remand only where the entire suit and not merely a portion of it had been disposed of by the Court upon a preliminary point (2). In an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a decree (sect 108 or O IX r 13 of this Code), the only case which cau be remanded to be tried on its merits is the application under sect 108, and not the original case the decree in which is sought to be set aside (3). When, in contravention of the provisions of sect 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, a Civil Court heard and determined a suit in which a question of tenant light was raised, and on appeal the Lower Appellate Court remanded the suit, it was held that that Court ought not to have done so, but should have passed the order required by sect 202 of the Act (4).

It not infrequently, however, happens that a remaid is necessary in consequence of an error, omission, or irregularity by reason of which there has not been a proper trial or an effectual and complete adjudication of the suit. The former Code not providing for the ease, difficulty was felt (5) and recourse was had to an inherent jurisdiction (6) (the only powers of remaind being those contained in secte 562 and 566 of that Code) (7) or a jurisdiction implied in the terms of other sections of the Code (8). So a case has been remainded where the suit was decided without the plaintiff being given a fair opportunity of knowing the line of defence he had to meet, (1) where the decision was given without taking the defendant's evidence , (2) or where an Appellate Court made an order under sects 27, 32, or 53 of the former Code , (3) or where the Court mistook the nature of the case (4) and had not properly tried an issue, (5) where the parties were or might have been misled by the act of the Court . (6) where an appeal was held wrongly to have abated, (7) or a suit was wrongly decided ex parte (8) A remand under sect 562 was, however, under the last Code held to he bad where the Lower Court acted arregularly in issuing a commission (9) and on the ground of defect of parties, (10) and where the deposition of the witnesses did not be ir the usual certificate (11) It was proposed to specially legislate for cases where the Lower Court had committed any error omission, or irregularity by reason of which in the opinion of the Appellate Court, there had not heen a proper trial or an effectual and complete adjudication of the suit as contemplated by law, and the party complaining of such error, omission or irregularity had been materially prejudiced thereby. The Special Committee, however, reported that they thought it safer not to give legislative sanction to the views enunciated by the Allahabad High Court in Habih Baksh v Baldeo Prisad,(12) considering that the power of reversal and remaid was liable to he abused while the procedure under r 25 was free from this liability and at the same tune furnished (as it considered) an effectual remedy. As to this it is to he observed that under that rule a remand is not made for a further trial and decision by the first Court on the whole case, but only for findings on specified issues to enable the appellate Court itself to pass a proper decision. Cases may occur where an Appellate Court has power to make an order under some section or rule of the Code, and in order to give effect to the provisions of the section or rule applicable, it is necessary that it should in certain cases for the ends of justice send back the case to the Court of first instance In the present Code the absolute prohibition of sect 561, which created a difficulty against the adoption of this course has been removed (that section being now omitted). and under sect 151 the Court may make such order as is necessary for the ends of justice Probably under the circumstances it is a correct conclusion to draw that though the Legislature has expressly omitted to lay down as a positive rule that a remand may be granted in the cases referred to in the proposed, but rejected, amendment, for fear that a power expressed in such wide terms might be hable to abuse, the Court may, where that course is absolutely necessary for the ends of justice, excicise the power of remand in cases not falling within the precise terms of this rule or of r 25, post Further, if an order of remand is erroneous, a party who has consented to it may be estopped from contesting it,(1) and in no case are subsequent proceedings void merely because of such error (2) It has, however, been recently held that an Appellate Court has no inherent power to remand when the Lower Court has committed errors materially prejudicing the complainant, and that its only power of remand is under sect 107 (1) (b) as limited by this rule and is no wider than it was under the last Code (3) In the under-mentioned cases it has been held that an order of remand may be made even when the disposal has not been on a strictly preliminary point, eg where there has been no regular hearing of the matter and the evidence on which the disposal was made has not been placed on record (4) Where a judgment had been partly based on evidence not on the record it was held on second appeal that if such evidence was excepted it would be impossible to decide whether the remainder was sufficient to support the judgment and the case was remanded (5) In this case the lower Court had rehed on a statement made by a pleader, and it was held that such a statement must be regularly proved and permission to admit additional evidence was given

"And the evidence"—It was reported that the practice in various pio vinces differed on the question whether evidence recorded in the proceedings leading up to the decree set aside under sec 562 was in itself available as evidence during the retrial, or whether it could only be made admissible in the case of witnesses attending at the hearing by examining them upon their previous depositions as statements recorded in a different proceeding. The Legislature has shown itself to be of the opinion that, subject to all just exceptions such depositions should of their own force be available as evidence. Evidence may be received from parties who did not appear at the former trial (6). Where the Judge in a remand observed that evidence was unnecessary, the declaration was held to sufficiently justify the plantiff in making no further application for a summons on their witnesses (7). Where a review had been granted for the purpose of seeing whether a chittah ought not to be used, and the case wis remanded for a chearing, the party was held to be concluded from objecting that the chitath a wis impropelly made use of upon the relevanting (8). appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required;

and such Court shall proceed to try such issues, and shall neturn the evidence to the Appellate Court together with its finding thereon and the reasons therefor.

Omission to frame or try issue -See notes to r 23 Prior to sect 52 of Act VII of 1888, sect 566, which this rule replaces, contained in place of the words "if necessary" the words "and the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine such assue or question" The rule, it has been said, is intended to provide for cases where some point has come to light in the Appellate Court which has not been raised or the importance of which has not occurred to the parties or to the Judge in the Court below (2) Where, however, though no specific issue has been framed on a particular question yet the matter has been tried and determined without any objection on the part of the plaintiff who has not been taken by surprise, but was fully informed by the defendant's list of documents and from cross examination of his witnesses that the defence would be taken, it is undesirable in general that the case should be sent back to be retried on a special issue framed as to that particular question (3) The expression "determine any question of fact" means in a legal manner (4) The Court may (5) frame issues (6) provided that there has been an omission (7) on the part of the Lower Count The Appellate Court should frame the issues which are essential and send them to the Lower Court for trial, but should not remand and direct the Lower Court to frame the issues (8)

The issues should be specifically stated by the Appellate Court | It is not sufficient to direct the case to be decided in accordance with the observations in the judge ment (1) It is always dangerous to allow parties to make a new case in a Mofussil Apprilate Court, and the Courts as a reporal rule should not allow a point not appearing in the eleadings or raised in any other way in the first Court to be framed into an issue (2) A party cannot change the nature of the case after remand (3) Where a Judge proceeds under this rule he should not reverse the decree of the Lower Court and remand the suit, but should frame the necessary issues and send them down for trial, and keep the suit pending until the return of the first Court's finding on the issues with the record of the trial (1) The efact of such an order is not a re hearing, and save as to the issues sent down the first Court has no power to deal with the case (5). The Court is to direct additional evidence to be taken, and the parties are entitled to have the opportunity of Living evidence upon the fresh issue, even though the order of remand contains no express direction to that effect (6). The parties should have the fullest opportunity to produce their evidence (7) When a case is remanded by one Judge and subsequently comes before another of equal jurisdiction (8) or the Judge's successor. (9) the latter officer cannot set aside the order of remand. So where a Judge remanded a case to be tried on a certain issue and directed the Munsiff to any plaintiff a decree according to the decision at which he would arrive, and the case went back in appeal before another Judge, it was held that the Appellate Court was limited to seeing whether the issue was a proper issue or not, and could not go behind the order (10) A Court to which a case is remanded for retrial, on a particular issue amongst others, cannot on remand allow that issue to be ahandoned and proceed to try the case upon the other issues raised. (11) nor can the Court refer the case to an arhitrator. (12) and when the case is remainded to the Lower Appellate Court for findings on certain issues.

it is not competent to that Court to delegate the decision of those issues to a Court subordinate thereto, (1) for when issues are remitted under this rule, such issues are triable only by the Court which was originally seized of the case (2) There is no appeal under the Letters Patent from an order referring to issues for trial (3)

"Additional evidence"—There ought not to he a remand for the purpose of enabling a party to make out a fresh case. If cases were remanded for the purpose of allowing parties to improve their respective cases by calling further witnesses there would he no end of hitigation (5). It is always dangerous to allow parties to make a new case and call fresh evidence upon an issue on which they have fuled upon the evidence originally adduced in support of it and more expressly so in the Mofussil Courts (6). The power given by this rule should be exercised sparingly except at the instance of the parties (7) and then with caution. he could have given below (1) Ordinarily speaking it is only when a Court sees that from some madvertence, mistake, or surprise a party has not adduced evidence which he was capable of adducing, and that he is likely to he prejudiced by the omission, that the Court should allow further evidence to he taken (2) The test as to whether additional evidence should be received depends on the question whether or not the Appellate Court requires the evidence ' to enable it to pronounce judgment" or for any other substantial cause, and as to this the Appellate Court is to be the sole judge (3) The word ' requires" means needs or finds uccdful The legitimate occasion for this rule is when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence, and the application is made to import it. That is the subject of review of judgment (4) An application to admit fresh documents the genuineness of which can be tested with certainty, stands on a much more favourable footing than an application to admit fresh parol evidence after the pinch and pressure of the case has been sustained, (5) but they should not be admitted if the appellaut cannot show sufficient cause, (6) or generally if having had an opportunity of tendering them in the Court below he omitted to do so , (7) or resisted their production , (8) or if they do not bear on the issues tried by the Court of first instance (9) Where the Appellate Court, with the assent of both sides, examines witnesses and also admits documentary evidence, and there is nothing to show that such admission was objected to, it is not open to any party ou appeal to the Privy Council to take exception to the regularity of this procedure (10) As each case must depend on its own circumstances it is not profitable to deal in detail with the eases in which additional evidence has been allowed or refused (11) A local inquiry may be ordered under this rule (12) The improper reception of evidence under this rule is not sufficient to reverse a decision if, independently of that evilence, there is sufficient evidence on the record (1) It has been held that on an appeal against an order made under O XVII r 3, when the plaintiff was present, but his witnesses were not, and no application for adjournment or to enferce the attendance of the witnesses was made, the Appellate Court should proceed under this rule to direct the admission of fresh evidence, and under 7 25 of this Order to refer the issues (which in fact had never been tried) for trial to the Court of first instance, directing that Court to return findings (2)

the power can be exercised even after the case has been remanded on special appeal (3) It is not necessary that the party before applying to the Appellate Court should have sought for a review of the original Court's judgment and asked at to receive the evidence (1) After a review has been admitted fresh evidence may be taken under this rule (5)

An appeal does not be from an order admitting or refusing to admit additional evilence (6) but both may be considered in an appeal from the final decree unk so the appellant has taken advantage of the order and so cannot subsequently impugn it in appeal (7) Where the Subordinate Judge in appeal took evidence and the case was heard in second appeal, it was held that the fact of the Lower Appellate Court taking additional evidence did not make the special appeal hable to be heard as if it were a regular appeal (8). The rejection of an appeal under this rule gives no right of appeal to the Privy Council (9) This and the next rule are not it has been held, applicable to proceedings before Civil Courts un her sect 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (10)

Mode of taking additional evidence is allowed to be produced, the Appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the Appellate Court

"Or direct the Court"—If the order is for the taking of particular evidence the Lower Court cannot go beyond it and take other evidence, (1) though in a case where A was directed to be examined and was ill, his agent was allowed to be examined in his stead (2) It has been held that the lower Court taking evidence acts in a ministerial capacity (sed queere), and that the parties may object to the admissibility of the cyclence recorded before it without objection, when it is submitted for the consideration of the Appellate Court (3)

29 Where additional evidence is directed or allowed to Foints to be defined and be taken, the Appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified

Judgment in appeal

30 The Appellate Court, after hearing the parties or mere pronounced the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the cone may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders

"After hearing"—It is the duty of the Appellate Court to allow the parties or their pleaders to submit the evidence to it at the hearing in open Court, and to make upon the evidence so submitted every comment and found upon it every argument they may think necessary. To succeed in an appeal on the ground that the Judge had neglected or misconceived his duty on this point the affidavits containing frets proving such an illegation ought to be perfectly clear and exhaustive, and should leave no doubt upon the subject excluding the possibility of the Judge having done that which it was his duty to do. The judgment may be given at once. But there are cases especially complicated eases, in which it is desirable that the Judge should have an opportunity of considering the evidence at leasure before giving judgment (1). This rule only authorizes the Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties and judgment pronounced without hearing them is unauthorized by the Code. This where the appellant died hefore the hearing of the appeal, but his pleader did not know of his death until after the appeal had heen decided, and an application of his son to the District Judge to have his name placed on the record, and the appeal reargued, was rejected. held by the High Court that as the representative of the pluntiff appellant applied within the prescribed timo to have his name entered on the record, the Court was bound to enter his name, and in not doing so the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Jaw. As the judgment was pronounced without hearing him, it was unauthorized by the Code (1) It has been held that the senior pleader who is present before the Court has the entire control of a case in the High Court, and that it is not open to the jumor pleader to take any ground of appeal which his senior has not thought fit to argue, except only when the senior has obtained the permission of the Court that that course should be taken (2)

Judgment of Appeal Court.—The duty of the Appellate Court is not to interfere with the judgment of the first Court until it is perfectly satisfied in its own mind that the conclusion arrived at by the first Court is erroneous. If there is any doubt in the case, the benefit of that doubt ought to be given to the respondent and not to the appellant, for it must be presumed in law that the judgment of the Lower Court is right until the contrary is shown. No doubt the Appellate Court may make further inquiries, but such inquiries ought to be made with discretion and only in those cases where the Appellate Court finds it unable to do justice to the parties on the evidence and material as they stand upon the record (3). The judgment therefore, of the first Court, if not shown to be erroneous, ought to he affirmed, and it is for the appellant to show manifest (4) errors in the decree appealed from (5). The Court of Appeal ought to give great weight, but not undue weight, to the of minor of the Judge who tried the cause and saw the witnesses and their demeanour. That gives him considerable advantages over those who only draw this information from

perusing the notes But still, though the Court of Appeal ought not lightly to find against the opinion of the Judge who tried the cause, that Court, if convinced that the inference in favour of the plaintiff ought not to have been drawn from the evidence, should find the verdict the other way (1) The parties to the cause are entitled, as well on questions of fact as ou questions of law, to demand the decision of the Court of Appeal, and that Court cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence and drawing its own in ferences and conclusions, though it should always bear in mind that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses and should make due allowance in this respect (2) "If we are to accept," says James, L J, "as final the decision of the Court of first instance in every case where there is a conflict of evidence, our labours would be very much lightened But then, that would be in truth to do away with the right of appeal in all cases of nuisance, for there is never one brought into Court in which there is not contradictory evidence, and there have been, I am satisfied, a larger percentage of appeals in those cases than in any other "(3) And therefore the Judge of an Appellate Court ought to explain his own views instead of merely saying that he adopts those of the first Court (4) It has been said as regards the rule of the Privy Council not to disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon a question of the credibility of witnesses, unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the couclusion drawn from such evidence, that however necessary as regards a Court of Appeal far removed from India, it need not be extended as one equally necessary and applicable with the same strictness, to a Court of Appeal in India, which has the opportunity of calling witnesses and has all the advantages to be derived from a personal acquaintance with the prople, their feelings, liabits, and character as well as other local advautages (5)

The dismissal of an appeal under sect 551 (now r 11) by a Court whose decision may be the subject of an appeal, does not relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of this rule, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points, and the reasons for deciding them Thus, where in Appellate Court's judgment was simply "Appeal rejected under sect 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure, ' held that

1 Court of second appeal cannot enter into the merits of the appeal, in order to accertain the weight of the evidence produced in support of the allegations of the parties. So it will insist upon having before it findings recorded in a judgment which strictly conforms to the imperative rule laid down in this rule The rule here had down cannot be too strictly enforced A judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is, as such worthless for the purpo es contemplated by the law Its imperative provisions apply able to cases remained by the first Appellate Court for trial of assues and to the c in which no such remand has taken place (2) As the High Court in second appeal is bound to accept the findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Court it should must upon a due obedience by those Courts of the mandate contained in this rule (3)

Under clau e (42) of the Letters Patent the Judges of the High Court are bound to record the reasons for their decisions and these reasons should on appeal to England be transmitted with the record for information at the hearing by the Judicial Committee (4) These reasons should be stated publicly at the hearing and not reserved to influence the Court of Appeal (5) But it has been held to be doubtful whether the former section applied to cases where the High Court having heard the judgment of the Court below and argument upon that judgment came to the conclusion that it was right and agreed with the reasons which it _ ive (6)

It was held that on remand under sect 366 of the last Code that sect 367 required the lower Court of Appeal to proceed to determine the appeal Sect 571 required it to pronounce judgment and sect 574 (this rule) was imperative as to what the judgment was to contain The Appellate Court was required to give its own decision and the reasons for it upon the issues remanded to the original Court under sect 566 (7) These provisions apply able to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for the trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place (8) A Judge having remanded a case for further evidence to be taken and a fresh finding recorded on a question of fact is bound though there is no memorandum of objection, to examine into the correctness of the finding and come to a conclusion whether he accepts it or not unless its correctness has been admitted by the party to whom it is adverse (1) An appellant is faily entitled to an expression of opinion of the Appellate Court on the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal (2) If, however, the Appellate Court is not asked to express any opinion on any particular ground of appeal stated in the memorandum of appeal, the Court is not at fault if no decision is passed upon it. If, having had his attention called to it, a Judge fails to decide such point, the proper course for the parties aggreed is to ask him to review his judgment. In order to satisfy the High Court that a point which the Judge omitted to notice was actually taken in the oral pleadings, a party may put in either an affidavit of some person who heard the point raised or a copy of the petition to the Judge drawing attention to the omission with his order (3) Where this rule has not been complied with and action is required, the Court may either reverse the decree and remand the case for a fresh decision, (4) and this is generally done, or the Court may (it has been said), without reversing the decree, retain the case on appeal, but return the proceedings in order that the Lower Court may state its reasons (5) But though a decision may not be as clear as it might have been, if there are words to be found which substantially dispose of the case set up the Court may consider it nnnecessary to remand for a clearer finding (6) It is, however, no objection that a judgment is short if it sufficiently appears that the evidence has been considered and the Court has given its opinion thereon (7) As to whether a Lower Court's omission to comply (8) with the terms of this rule can be considered a ground for second appeal sec notes to sect 100, ante

Clause (a)—The necessity for this clause is obvious it being the foundation of those which follow. The point or points on which the appeal has to be decided should be set down distinctly (9). And it is a convenient practice which keeps the decision on each point and the reasons therefor separate from the rest.

Clause (b)—The judgment should clearly and fully dispose of all the points in issue between the parties by a distinct finding on each of them (10)

Sect 565 of the last Code was held to enable the Appellate Court in some cases to determine a question of fact upon the evidence then on the record, but not to declare a right in fayour of one of the parties, where no issue had been framed on the point, and the right had not been set up in the Lower Court (1). The Judge should specifically decide each point or noints raised and give his reasons It is not sufficient to say that by confirming generally the order of the Lower Court it has therefore virtually tried and disposed of the particular point when no mention has been made by it (2) Where the Appellate Court does not sufficiently consider important matters, such as sufficiency of notice or a question of the nature of a tenure, its judgment will be set aside (3)

Clause (c) - Having stated the points for determination and the decision thereon, the Court must state its reasons therefor (4) The provisions of this rule are imperative, and require the Appellate Court to give its own decision and the reasons for it (5) and a judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is, as such, worthless for the purposes con templated by the law (6) It is not, however, laid down in this rule that the underment of the Appellate Court, any more than the underment of the Court of the first instance, is to contain a review or setting forth of the whole of the evidence, and therefore it can hardly be assigned as an absolute error if a judgment is defective on this point. Although the law does not require a detailed examina tion of the cyidence, yet the Judge does well who gives an intelligent and char account of the evidence which he has had to consider, and states the reasons for which he thinks particular portions of the evidence to have heen more or less worthy of consideration The Judge of the Appellate Court who most fully gave his reasons or his judgment and most fully entered into the merits of the case before him would be held to have most efficiently and intelligently carried out the duties required of him (7) In certifying to the High Court the findings on issues sent back on remand the Lower Appellate Court in the absence of any distinct admission by the appellant's pleader that the finding of the first

32 The judgment may be for confirming, varying or what judgment may reversing the deerce from which the appeal agree is to the form which the deerce in appeal shall take, or as to the order to be made in appeal, the Appellate Court may pass a decree or make an order accordingly

Judgment in appeal.—As to functions of the Appeal Court see notes to sect 96 and r 4 and the last rule of this Order (4). The powers conferred by this rule are powers which require that parties should be in accord with each other at the time when the decree is pronounced by the Appellate Court. The use of the word 'min,' indicates discretion in a Court and does not force the Court to pass a decree in any manner which goes beyond the scope of its discretionary power. This where an application continuing the terms of a compromise was presented to the High Court by one of the parties and the Solchinama was cent down to the Lower Court for verification but the attendance of the parties for that purpose could not be procured the High Court refused to pass a decree under set 577 in necordance with the terms of the Solchinama (5)

33 The Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree power of court of and make any order which ought to have been Appeal or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objections

The Appellate Court decides in favour of X . It has power to pass a decree against Y

Powers -1 his rule, which is taken from English O 58, r 4, is new, and has been inserted because (as the Select Committee said) it is most imperative that an Appellate Court should have the fallest power to do complete justice hetween the parties (I) It is applicable to all cases where an appeal is heard after this Code came into force (2) The latter part of the clause is explained by the illustration (3) It is open to the Appellate Court to vary the decree appealed against, either in points (if any) in which it is erroneous or in respect of supplemental matters which are admitted (4) It is entitled to take eognizance of events which have happened since the filing of the appeal (5) or, in other words, it is open to the Appellate Court to vary a decree under appeal, not only for error, but also on grounds which have come into existence since it was passed (6) The Courts, in the exercise of the powers conferred by this rule, should not lose sight of the other provisions of the Code, nor of the Court Fees Act, nor of the Limitation Act In particular, it should hear in mind the ease stated in the Illustration (7) R 22 of this Order shows that it is intended that (prima facie at least) a respondent should not be allowed to take exception to so much of a decree as was against him without complying with the provisions of the rule (8)

"May not have filed any appeal or objection"—See notes to rr i and 22 of this Order, as also notes to seet 96, ante

34 Where the appeal is heard by more Judges than one, any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court shall state in writing the decision of order which he thinks should be passed on the appeal, and he may state his reasons for the same

Decree in appeal

35 (1) The decree of the Appellate Court shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced.

(2) The decree shall contain the number of the appeal, the names and descriptions of the appellant and respondent, and a clear specification of the rehef granted or other adjudication made.

(4) The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the appeal, and by whom, or out of what property, and in what proportions such cost and the costs in the suit are to be paid

(4) The decree shall be signed and dated by the Judge or Judges who bassed it;

Provided that where there are more Judges than one and Judge absenting from Judge and there is a difference of opinion among them, it shall not be necessary for any Judge describe.

Appellate decree.-The appellate decree is the first decree and the only decree capable of being executed after it has been passed, whether the same reverses, modifies, or confirms the decree of the Court from which the appeal was made (I) It is clear from the terms of this rule that in any case the decree to be executed, not only for the costs of the appeal, but for the costs of the suit, is the decree of the Appellate Court only The effect of the rule is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the Court below. even when the decree of the Appellate Court is one which merely affirms that decree below and does not reverse it or modify it. The only decree that can be amended as the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed as the decree of the Appellate Court and not the decree of the Court helow (2) If a decree is made in appeal so that the appellate decree becomes the one to be executed, time runs from its date and not from that of the original decree (3) When, however, an appellant withdraws an appeal, no decree is made. The order of the Court does not come within the definition of the word "decree" The litigation commenced with the presentation of the appeal is merely dis continued, and the ease remains as if the appeal had never taken place, and the decree appealed against becomes final, and time runs from the date of that decree (4) The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend an appellate decree is the Court of Appeal (5) When two parties to a suit appeal, so that the one appeal is but the cross appeal of the other, there ought to be only one final decree made between the two parties. Not only is there nothing to prevent, but it is the duty of the Court to make one decree, and only one decree, between the same parties (1) The date which the decree should bear is the date when the judgment was delivered (2)

"Relief granted," etc -A deerce should be so drawn up as to need no interpretation other than may be gathered from the language of the decree itself, and there should be no need of reference to any document or paper whatsoever, unless such document or paper is attached to the decree and forms part of it While, on the one hand, it is true that the decree should be drawn up in this manner, it is also just that litigants who have been successful should not be deprived of the fruits of their success owing to carelessness on the part of the Court or officer charged with the preparation of decrees Thus where a decree, in its terms, is ambiguous, the Court executing the decree can refer to the plead ings in the suit in which the decree was passed to ascertain its precise meaning (3) Again, where the decres omits to reserve the rights of prior mortgages admitted by all the parties to the suit, it ought to be construed with reference to the admission contained in the pleading or made in the course of the case, and ought not to be so construed as to grant a larger measure of rehef than is prayed for or to negative rights admitted by all parties (4) The decree of the Appellate Court should be drawn up in such a form as will show in itself the ultimate rehef granted If the Appellate Court decrees an additional amount and the decree as drawn up only mentions the amount decreed by the first Court, and the amount due to the decree holder is ascertainable from the decree of the first Court and the finding of the Lower Appellate Court, then he should obtain execution for the amount found in his favour and for his costs (5) This rule does not require the claim to be stated in the decree so as to make the statement a part of the decree itself (6)

Costs—It was held that the former section, when it provided that the discrete of the Appellate Court should state by what parties and in what proportion the costs in the red in the appeal and the costs in the suftwere to be prid, referred to the parties who were parties to the appeal, and not to parties who were not arrayed either as appellants or as respondents in the appeal, but who under sect 541 of the former Code, might take the benefit of the decree (7). This section referred (as does also this rule) to cases where there are more parties than one made liable for costs, which necessitate the fixing by the Court of Appeal of the proportion in which the costs are to be paid (8)

It is the husiness of the Appellate Court finally determining a suit to decide by which of the parties before it the costs shall be horne, it is not at liberty to deelere that the costs of the suit shall be borne by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be thereafter brought, because it mucht be that the suit will not be brought at all, and in that case there will be no execution, or the plaintiff and the defendant nught he left to bear their own costs (1) Though the Judge must state hy what parties (and in what proportions if necessary) the costs of the original suits are to be paid, he is not bound to go into particulars, or append to his judgment a schedule setting forth the different items which make up the costs of the first Court He takes the amount of costs for granted and decides who is to pay them (2) Where the order of the Appellate Court awarded (a) all the costs of the appeal, amounting to a certain sum named (b) all the costs in the original Court, not naming any sum, and (c) the costs of the remand, and it was argued that the decree holders were only entitled to the sum of money specifically named in the High Court's deerce for easts, and that they could not have the costs of the first Court, because the amount was not mentioned, nor the costs of the remand because such remand costs if they come in under any he id at all would come under the head of costs of the appeal and that these had not been allowed beyond the sum fixed by the decree, it was held that the decree was perfectly clear as to what it meant to give and there was nothing in the law which made the order for costs bad simply because it did not specify the exact sum to be paid as costs of the Lower Court, that there was nothing to make it incumbent on a Court of Appeal to specify the amount of the costs incurred in the first Court It had only to declare the proportion in which they were to be paid. As to the costs of the remand it was held that the decree declared that hesides the costs of the appeal and the costs in the original Court the costs of the remand were to be paid, it did not matter whether those costs were included or not in the appeal costs (3) But though the law does not direct that n Court should annex to every decree the costs mourred by both parties, yet it is a convenient practice to do so (4) When an Appellate Court decrees an appeal and gives costs of its own Court, the costs of the first Court should be meluded in the decree (5) When an appeal is dismissed on wholly different grounds from those relied on hy the Court below the dismissal should be without costs (6)

Appeals from Appellate Decrees.

1. The rules of Order XLI shall apply, so far as may be,

ORDER XLIV.

Pauper Appeals.

1. Any person entitled to prefer an appeal, who is unable who may appeal as to pay the fee required for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable.

Provided that the Court shall reject the application unless,

Procedure on application of an application of admission of an decree appealed from, it sees reason to appeal. think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust

The inquiry into the pauperism of the applicant may be made either by the Appellate Court or under the orders of the Appellate Court by the Court from whose decision the appeal is preferred:

Provided that, if the applicant was allowed to sue or appeal as a pauper in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, no further inquiry in respect of his pauperism shall be necessary, unless the Appellate Court sees cause to direct such inquiry

Application—In the case of appeals the rule requires two separate documents to be presented—an application for leave to appeal is a pumper, and a memorandum of appeal. When the Judge disposes of the pumper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. There are two separate documents and in this respect this evas differs from a polition to such as a pumper which includes both the plaint the allegations as to pumpersin, and the prayer to such as a pumper. In the latter case, when the pumper petition is rejected in left of NXXIII is 7 the proceedings are at an end, and the Judge, has no jour to allow it to be stumped, as a plaint, it 15 of that Order providing the course, open to the applicant viz to institute a suit in the ordinary manner. On the other hand, in proceedings under this rule, when the Judge refuses leave to appeal as a pauper, he effectually deals with the pauper application, but he does not necessarily deal with the memorandum of appeal which accompanies it rejection of the application, there is nothing to prevent him from treating the memorandum as still a memorandum of appeal, if the appellant, on being refused leave to appeal as a pauper, desires, with the aid of horrowed funds or the assistance of friends, to continue the appeal If O XXXIII r 15 applied to the memorandum of appeal, the result would in practice be that the appeal would be time harred when the application was refused. The result is that a Court is under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal if and when it refused leave to appeal as a pauper (1)

"Subject, in all matters"-A petition for leave to appeal as a pauper is presented together with a memorandum of appeal. It was held under the last Code that the presentation of the application itself was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXVI of that Code But, after an application had been presented, all action taken subsequent to such presentation was by the terms of the section to be subject to the rules contained in that Chapter Therefore sect 404 of that Code, which required, except in certain circumstances. that the application should be presented in person, did not apply (2) In any case, if sect 404 did apply an appeal presented on hehalf of an exempted papper by a vakil retained under an ordinary retainer and not authorized to sign as agent, was considered insufficiently presented (3) A petition presented by a duly authorized agent of an exempted person though not by an advocate. valil, or attorney was properly presented (4) Although the Madras High Court held that the question of the presentation of an appeal was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXXVI of the former Code, the same Court determined that the question of the right to appeal under the section corresponding with r 1 of this Order was subject to such rules Therefore, when at the time of the institution of the suit there was subsisting an agreement falling within the terms of sect 407 (d), now (O XXXIII r 5 cl (e)) no leave to anneal under r 1 could it was held be given to the plaintiff who by such agreement had allowed other persons to obtain an interest in the subject matter of the suit (1) The amendment now includes the presentation of the application, and has been made to avoid the conclusion at which the Madras High Courtarrised in the decision cited

After presentation of the petition an inquiry as to pauperism is directed, and the application to appeal as a pauper is refused or granted (2). The application must be presented within thirty days from the date of the decree-appealed against, and no extension can be allowed under sect. 5 of the Limitation Act (3). The Code of 1859 directed (4) that the inquiry might be conducted either by the Appellate Court, or by the Court from whose decision the appeal was made under the orders of the Appellate Court, provided that if the applicant was allowed to sue in forma pauperis in the Court helow no further inquiry was allowed to sue in forma paupers in the Court should see special cause to direct such inquiry, and these provisions have been reproduced in sect. 593 of the last Code and r. 2 of this Order.

The proceedings are subject to the provisions mentioned only "in so far as those provisions are applicable". So if the appellant is found to be a pauper, and the appeal is admitted, he cannot be called in to give security for costs (5). It would render the section nugatory if the Judge could say that although the applicant was a pauper, and although there was just ground for appealing (for such a decision is required by the proviso), a condition shall be imposed which, in the case of a pauper, would render it impossible to go on with the appeal. The question has already been discussed as to whether this rule is subject to O XXXIII r 3, and a memorandum of appeal to r 15 of that Order

Proviso to r 1—This is mandatory, being a necessary safeguard for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers, and the Courts should be eareful to see that the proviso is satisfied. It is to be noticed that the Court must come to its conclusion upon a perusal only of the application the judgment and decree. This proviso is apt to be overlooked, but it would provide a safeguard against this it the Judge or Bench admitting a pauper appeal were to express and record very hriefly the reasons for granting leaves that the Appellate Court may have an assurance that the leave was properly given (6)

Appeal.—The Code gives no appeal from an order refusing leave to appeal as a pauper (7). As regards appeal from orders of a single Judge rejecting in application on the original side of the High Court, it was held that no appeal lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court made under this rule rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forma pouperis (1). These decisions, however, proceeded on the ground that the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent is subject to the limitations on appeal presented by the Code (2). It is, however, now law, so far as the Calcutta and Madras High Courts are concerned, that the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Privy Council, (3) is that sect 588 (now 104) of the Code does not touch the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (4)

Respondents—The Code provides for pauper plaintiffs and appellants, hunt for pauper defendants and respondents. Objections his a respondent to a decree under O XLI is 22 cannot be filed in forming paupers. If a pauper desires to contest any part of the decree of the Court of first instance which is inflavourable to him, he should directly appeal as a pauper, and, as an appeal lant, clium the benefit of this section (5). The opinion has here expressed that the omission was unintentional, (6) but, on the other hand, it has been said that the reason why no exception is made in favour of a pauper respondent probably was that he already had the opportunity of directly making an appeal without expense for court fees, and that an inquiry into his pauperism at the last stage of the ease would involve great delay and meanvenence (7). The omission now must be taken to be intentional, the Legislature considering that the exceptional liberty of moving a Court in forms paupers should not extend to objections to appeals.

determined by a Division Bench of the High Court, which in theory of Law is a decision of the High Court All that a Judge of the High Court can in most cases do after that is to assist the parties in bringing their appeal before the Privy Council Of course, an Act of the Imperial Parliament or a provision of the Letters Patent assued in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or an order issued by His Muesty in Council inight confer upon the High Court, or a Judge of that Court, not only power to admit or reject an appeal but might make the right to uppeal dependent upon that admission or rejection. But if that has been done in any case whatever it is only in the cases in which the High Court has power to declare that the case is a fit one for appeal. The Courts in India have no power to admit or allow an appeal upless expressly authorized to do so by competent authority (1) The admission of an appeal to the Privy Conneil is not a matter as to which the High Court bas any discretion provided that the requirements of the law are satisfied. All that the High Court has to do is to that the requirements of sect 110 ire satisfied. If they are an appeal hes under sect 100 is a matter of right. The application for a certificate that these requirements are satisfied is morely preliminary and ancillary to the idmission of the appeal (2)

"Amount or value"-Sec notes to sect 110 arte

'Otherwise '—By sect 10° and this rule an appel into be granted if the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal otherwise i.e when not meeting the conditions of sect 110. That is clearly intended to meet special cases, such for example as those in which the point in displite is not measure shie by money though it may be of great public or private importance. To certify that a crose is of that kind though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court is a judicial process which cannot be performed without special exercise of that discretion evinced by the fitting certificate. In the absence of the conditions required by the Cot to give the right of appeal no certificate under this rule can be issued even with the assent of the other party (3). When the matter is under the appealable value there should be an application under this cluste before the proper Court in India for a certificate (1).

together, and the decree in one applying in principle to the other two suits,(1) is also where \(\) and \(B \) purchased the same properties deriving title from different persons. The value of the properties with messe profits was over \(R \) 8 10,000 \(B \) granted two path leaks of the properties to different persons. A was, therefore, obliged to bring two suits for the recovery of the properties and the value of the subject matter in each suit was less than \(R \) 8 10 000 (2) But where there were distinct causes, separate judgments given in each suit and the suits were not consolidated in Courts below, but were all along treated as separate and distinct actions such suits it was held could not be consolidated for the purpose of appeal to the Privy Council (3). These principles have been embodied in this rule, which is new. And it has been held under it that where the fundamental question is common to all the suits and the cases are tried together and decided by the same judgment, the suits will be consolidated for purposes of pecuniary valuation, even though a substantial question of law arises in some of the suits and not in others (4)

When an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is inade in under than one suit which have not been consolidated though the points to be decided are the same in all of them, it must be shown that in each of the suits the amount or value of the matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council is Rs 10 000 or upwards (5). But in a recent case a large number of suits for receivery of possession of distinct parcels of land where tried together dealt with in one judgment, and wero decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, of these some were for sums over Rs 10 000 and leave to appeal was granted, of the remaining cases, each taken separately, the value was below Rs 10 000 yet if taken collectively the aggregate reached that amount and all the cases were dependent on the same judgment, leave to appeal was granted in the suits where the value of the subject of each suit was below Rs 10 000 (6)

5. In the event of any dispute arising between the parties as Remission of dispute to the amount or value of the subject matter of to Court of first instance, or as to the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Court to which a petition for a certificate is made under rule 2 may, if it thinks fit, refer such dispute for report to the Court of first instance, which last mentioned Court shall proceed to determine such amount or value and shall return its report together with the evidence to the Court by which the reference was made

single Judge called the "Judge of the Privy Council Appeal Department,"(1) and there is no appeal from the order of such a Judge, (2) or it may be given by a Bench consisting of more than one Judge hearing the applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council The certificate and not the order for the certificate is the document which their Lordships are bound to consider and act upon, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify the leave, their Lordships will hold that leave has not been properly given. Thus where the order for the certificate was "Let certificate issue, that the case is fit one for appeal to Her Maiesty in Council,' but the certificate stated "The Court, having had before it an application for leave to appeal to Her Imperial Majesty the Queen in Her Priva Council presented on behalf of the appellant aforesaid, it is certified that though the valuation of the case is below Rs 10,000, yet as regards the value and nature of the case it fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (Act XIV of 1882)." held that the leave was granted without jurisdiction. Valuation is an essential part of the requirements under that section, and when the valuation of the case is below the amount mentioned in that section, leave cannot be granted under that section. An erroneous certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sect 110 is ineffectual even if assented to by the respondent In cases below Rs 10,000, there must be a special certificate that the case is "otherwise" fit for appeal (3) under sect 109 (c) and r 3 Where in the petition for leave to appeal the prayer was that a certificate might be granted that, as regards value and nature, the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110), but the order on it was "Let a certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council, and let the usual notices be issued ' held by the Privy Council that the leave was given pursuant to sect 595 (c) (now sect 109 (c)) and the latter alternative of sect 600 (now r 3), and was properly given (i) When the petition for leave stated "the appeal involved some substantial questions of law and the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596, and was a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Conneil," and the order was "we think on the whole that this is a case in which a cirtificate for leave to appeal to Ilis Majesty in Council ought to be granted," held that the certificate was properly given (5) But where the certificate was "eartified that the above case fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110) as regulds value and nature masmuch as the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was unwards of Rs 10 000 and the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Wajesty's Privy Council also exceeds that amount

single Judge called the "Judge of the Privy Council Appeal Department," (1) and there is no appeal from the order of such a Indge (2) or it may be given by a Bouch consisting of more than one Judge hearing the applications for have to appeal to the Privy Council. The eartificate and not the order for the certificate is the document which their Lordships are bound to consider and act upon, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify the leave their Lordships will hold that leve has not been properly given. Thus where the order for the certificate was "Let certificate assue, that the ease is fit one for appeal to Her Maiests in Council ' but the certificate stated 'The Court, having had before it an application for leave to appeal to Her Imperial Vajesty the Queen in Her Priva Council presented on behalf of the appellant aforesaid it is certified that though the valuation of the ease is below Rs 10,000 yet as regards the value and nature of the case it fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (Act XIV of 1882), ' held that the leave was granted without jurisdiction. Valuation is an essential part of the requirements under that section, and when the valuation of the case is below the amount mentioned in that section, leave cannot be granted under that section. An erroneous certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sect. 110 is ineffectual even if assented to by the respondent In cases below Rs 10 000 there must be a special certificate that the case is "otherwise" fit for appeal (3) under sect 109 (c) and r 3 Where in the petitionfor leave to appeal the prayer was that a certificate might be granted that, as regards value and nature, the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110), but the order on it was 'Let's certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to Ifis Majesty in Council and let the usual notices be issued held by the Privy Council that the leave was given pursuant to seet 590 (c) (now seet 109 (c)) and the latter alternative of sect 600 (now r 3) and was properly given (i) When the petition for leave stated "the appeal involved some substantial questions of law and the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596, and was a fir case for appeal to His Majesty in Council" and the order was " w think on the whole that this is a case in which a certificate for leave to ann al to Hs Majesty in Council ought to be granted, ' held that the certificate was properly given (5) But where the ecrtificate was 'certified that the above case fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110) as regards value and rature masmuch as the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was upwards of Rs 10 000 and the value of the matter in disnut' on appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council also exceeds that amount could not, it was held, be made before the High Court, but the Judicial Com inities might deal with the question when the whole case was before them (1)

For the rule as to transmission of evidence and other documents, see clause 42 of the Charter The Charters of the High Courts expressly require that the reasons of their decisions should be recorded by the Judges and trans mitted for the information of the Privy Council with the records (2) All costs and expenses unnecessarily occasioned by the inclusion in the transcript sent from India of matters improperly introduced therein will be disallowed (3) All petitions and applications connected with appeals to His Wajesty in Council except Mooltarnamas should be drawn up in the English language Security bonds are not made a part of the proceedings transmitted to England, and so need not be drawn up in that language (1) Where an appeal to the Privy Council has been admitted against a regular decree made in appeal such proceedings as applications for review of the judgment and the order of the Court should not form part of the transcript, and should not be sent to England with the record of the original appeal to the Privy Council (5) Nor will the appellant be allowed to refer to or read as evidence in the appeal to the Privy Council the documents tendered to the Court on the application for the review of judgment as the order refusing such application has not been appealed from (6) Where the Court of first instance framed and decided several issues, and the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result of the suit, only so much of the original records as properly bore upon and might be natural for the decisions of the questions of law, decided by the High Court and the subject of the appeal, should, it was held, be printed and transmitted (7)

(d) place any party seeking the assistance of the Court under such conditions or give such other direction respecting the subject-matter of the appeal, is it thinks fit, by the appointment of a Receiver or otherwise.

"The grant of a certificate"-It was evident from the express terms of sect 608 of the last Code that the intention of the Legislature was to confer on the High Court the powers therein indicated only in the event of the appeal having been already admitted The Calcutta High Court accordingly uniformly refused to grant any apphication under that section before an appeal was finally admitted (1) But the Bomhay High Court held that it could order stay of execution of its decree when only the necessary petition for admission had been presented, but that petition had not come before the Court and the appeal had not been declared admitted (2) Under the section as it now stands, the application may he made hefore the appeal is finally admitted under 1 8 It was formerly doubted whether the High Court could act under this rule where the appeal had not been certified by itself, but special leave had been granted by the Privy Council (3) But it has now been held by the Privy Council that the High Court has power to stay execution in such ? case (4) The Calcutta High Court has held that it has no power to stay proceedings in a suit following a preliminary decree for partition against which it has granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and that the latter alone can do so since it has seisin of the appeal (5)

Preservation of property pending appeal—The principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is that the successful party in the litigation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not obtain merely a harren success (6) Property may be thus preserved either by taking possession of it when moveable, under clause (a), taking security for its restriction under clause (b), by stay of execution under clause (c), or by making such other order as may be necessary (and as to this the Court is given a complete discretion) under clause (d)

"Taking such security," clause (b)—The object of security being takin from the holder of a decree from which an appeal has heen preferred to the Privy Council is to indemnify the appellant for any loss he may suffix owing to the execution heing taken out by the decree holder during the pendency of the appeal in the Privy Council It is therefore only on the execution of the decree that the surety becomes liable If the decree holder, after applying for execution of the decree, does not take any further steps for execution, and the decree remains unexecuted, the terms of the security bond fills to the ground, and the surety cannot in any way be made table for costs or anything (see swarded by the High Court (1) The Court may require security although nossession of the property in dispute has been already obtained without the Living of 8 curity (2) Security to the extent of the whole sum deereed need not always be taken from the decree holder. When security is taken for less than the full amount decreed, the decree holder should be restrained from issuing process of execution with a view to realizing any sum in excess of the amount for which security is given (3) The ordinary practice is that calculation is made for an amount sufficient to meet the mesne profits which are to go to the hands of the decree holder from the date of his obtaining possession to the probable date of the eventual execution of the decree of the Privy Council That period is generally taken to be three years (1) A Hindu widow's interest in her husband's estate has been refu ed as such security (5) Judges in reporting upon the securities, should state particulars of the documents which have been produced and proved before them and upon which the title of the surety inicars to he mide out but they need not transmit to the High Court the documents produced before them (6) The High Court under whose directions security has been taken can release a surety, a District Judge has no right to do so (7) A judgment dehter pending an appeal to the Privy Council. having been ordered by the High Court to furnish security within two months, put in a petition in the District Court on the list day allowed by the order, tendering a dur putni mehal is security and on the following day gave an unrelistered security hand, which was rejected by the Judge on the grounds that the bond was unregistered and 'there being no guarantee that the property pledged will turn out available Held that the bond offered as security was not required to be registered until the security had been accepted and before rejecting it the Judge should direct an investigation into the sufficiency or otherwise of the property tendered (8) In the case ested it was held that the provisions of the Contract Act relating to revocation of a surety were mapplicable to a person who had stood as a surety under this rule because there was no personal guarantee given by him (9)

Stay of execution, clause (c)—See ante 'Preservation of property pend injupped after the vianission of an appeal to the Privy Council, with leave granted by a High Court ipplication for stay of execution of a decree pending an uppert to His Viapesty in Council ought ilways to be made in the first instance at any rate to the Court in India which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the particular case and has knowledge of details which the Privy Council cumor bossess on an interlocutory application Where, on in application, the High Court made in order "that" execution be stayed for three months from this date so is to give the defendants in opportunity to apply to the Privy Council for stay of execution," the Judici il Committee held that the application should have been made to the Court in India, but acting upon the suggestion of the High Court, their Lordships recom mended stay of execution on terms (1) The Privy Council stated that they could not stay execution, but where special leave was given they have idvised it (3) But where, after the declaration that an appeal has been admitted, an application for stay of execution was rejected (the Judges hearing the application differing in their opinion, and the adverse judgment of the Senior Judge prevailing) on a petition for special leave to appeal, the Judicial Commuttee, being of opinion that as the two judges in the High Court had differed in opinion, the discretion of the High Court had not in fact been exercised, made an order for stay of execution (3) And where the High Court refused to make an order for want of jurisdiction in an appeal not certified by itself, the Judicial Committee advised the grant of an order of stay (4) The under mentioned case dealt with the procedure to be followed, where there was an order of Comt to stay the execution of a decree obtained by a party who had appealed to the Privy Council from another decree against himself if the holder of the decice which was appealed against attempted to execute it (5) Where a judgment debtor who has appealed to the Privy Council obtained a rule miss from the High Court suspending execution until security was given, which was subsequently made absolute, it was held not to operate against the decree holder in the matter of time, limitation not running against him until the result of the appeal was known, or the rule otherwise fell to the ground (6) An application for staying execution for costs pending an appeal is not granted as a matter of course unless evidence be adduced to show that the respondent to the appeal will be unable to repay the amount levied by execution, if the appellant be successful, such an application is in England not granted (7)

"Such other direction," clause (d)—the words "by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise" have been added, thus authorizing the High Courts in India to grant such relief when necessary. This provision as well as the others would appear to apply to appeals certified by the High Court itself, when a certificate was refused, but special leave was granted by the Judicial Committee. The latter said that it was impracticable that they should directly interfree to continue the manager of to appoint receiver. "Interference have the feeted in cases where the Courts in India had jurisdiction over the subject matter, and an intimation to them would be effective, or where, the appellant being in possession, a stay of proceedings would keep the position of things intert. Where the High Court had no jurisdiction it could not be directed to act, but their Lordships ordered a stay of proceedings (1). the amount is realized or paid or execution taken out, and not the year in which the decree was passed. Oldfield, J, said in that case "the rate of exchange heing fixed yearly by the Sceretary of State for Iudia in Council, the rate of exchange on the date of the appheation for execution was the proper rate of exchange the decree-holders were entitled to." But this ruling was dissented from by the Calcutta High Court, and it was held (1) that the words "for the time being" have reference only to the time at which the order of the Privy Council was passed. This case has been followed in several other cases in Calcutta, (2) and the matter is now settled by the adoption of the rulings of the Calcutta High Court

Costs -The costs assessed in England are only the costs incurred before the Privy Council, and do not include the costs of translation, etc., incurred in India (3) In almost all the appeals which go to the Privy Council there are costs incurred here for translating and preparing the record for transmission to England, and it has never been the practice of the Privy Council to make any order in specific terms as to these costs, and that whenever a specific sum is allowed by the Privy Council as costs of appeal, that is considered to cover the costs of appeal in England only, and it has always been assumed that an order drawn in this form covers the costs in India though they are not men tioned (4) When the Privy Council decrees not only a certain specified sum as the costs of the appeal in England, but also awards the costs incurred in the Courts in India, the decree-holder is cutifled to the costs for translating the record of the appeal and for transmitting it to England (5) Where only one defendant appeals successfully to the Privy Council and obtains his costs, his co defendants who did not appeal are not cutitled to their costs (6) If costs are occasioned by the introduction of unnecessary and urrelevant matter into the second, they will be disallowed by the Privy Council (7) Where an order of the Judicial Committee is silent as to interest upon the costs decreed, the Judge of the lower Court which has to exceute the decree has no power to direct payment of those costs with interest (8) Where the deeree of the first Court, confirmed by the Privy Council, allowed interest on costs incurred, the decree holder was held entitled to interest on the costs incurred on account of translation and printing, hecause the Pilvy Council had adopted the decice of the local Court and made it a dominant decree as regards costs in all Courts The effect of that decree is that the Privy Council decree became a decree for to belong to the mosque,(I) or to an order fining a pleader (2) The proceeding in which the reference is made must be one in which there may be a decree,(3) and in which such decree, when passed, is final (4) For in appealable cases a remedy to cornect possible error is provided by the appeal. The question must be one of law, and the Court cannot make a reference on a point merely on the application of the parties unless it entertains a reasonable doubt upon the matter, (5) nor on a point on which a Division Bench of the High Court has expressed an opinion (6) A Judge cannot ordinarily entertain a reasonable doubt on a point clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court of his Presi dency, unless the authority of the decision can be questioned by virtue of any thing said or decided in the Privy Council (7) In r 1 the words " or the construction of a document which construction may affect the merits" have been omitted as they are sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law. The alterations in r 2 are verbal only It has been held that a Collector hearing an application under sect 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdar's Court Act, 1906, has no power to make a reference to the High Court, not being a Court trying a suit or appeal or executing a decree (8)

Presidency Small Cause Courts -Sect 69 of Act XV of 1882 provides for a compulsory reference where the Judges differ in opinion as to any question of law or construction of a document affecting the merits, and also where, in suits exceeding Rs 500 in amount or value, any such question arises upon which the Court entertains reasonable doubt, and either party so requires (9) The provisions of rr 3-5, so far as they are applicable, are deemed to apply as if such reference had been made under the present rules It was formerly said (10) not to be an easy matter to make sect 69 dovetail with the present rules, and divergent views (11) were entertained upon the question whether sect. 63 was controlled by them — It is now unnecessary to further consider the matter, as by Act IV of 1906 the Presidency Small Court Act was amended with a view to remove the difficulties which had been experienced.

3. The High Court, after hearing the parties of they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy and case disposed of its judgment, under the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which the reference was made; and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court.

"After hearing the parties."—The rule has here been altered, as the language of the former section might, if strictly interpreted, require a hearing of the parties even though they had not appeared

"Dispose of the case."—The word "case" in the last part of the rule refers to "the case" in the first part showing that what is intended is the suit and not the subject of the reference (1). Where the Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs, but contingent on the opinion of the High Court, and on the reference the latter decided that upon the plaint before the Court the plaintiffs could not recover, it was held that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn, but on receipt of the copy of the judgment of the High Court was bound to enter judgment for the defendants. Had the case heen referred in an intermediate stage, the fluid judgment heing withheld until the decision on the point referred to the High Court, the Small Cause Court would then have been in possession of the case, but having pronounced judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court, which opinion was against that judgment, there was odd one course to take (2)

Review.—The judgment passed by the High Court is not a decree or order within clause (b) of O XDVII r I but simply a statement of the grounds in conformity with which the Subordinate Judge is to dispose of the case as provided by this rule (3). A review is expressly given by that order and rule in the case of a judgment on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, but not one from a Subordinate Judge exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court (1)

4. The costs (if any) consequent on a reference for the Costs of reference to decision of the High Court shall be costs in the case.

Costs.—Costs "in the case" means costs of the suit or appeal, as in r l, this rule being the one under which the costs are dealt with, and the costs being

Submission for royision -It has been held by the Madras (2) and Calcutta (3) High Courts that the Judge is bound to make a reference if one of the parties requires him to do so The Allahabad Court has, however, held that the word "shall" in the former section was not mandatory but directors, and that before a District Court could make a reference under it, it must be of opinion that the Suhordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it, and that therefore the matter was one in which the interference of the High Court should be sought (1) When a reference is made to the High Court under r 7, the Court which makes it should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the Subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous (5) Notwithstanding sect 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court has, on a case being submitted to it under this rule, full power to consider tho matter of purisdiction or to deal with it on the merits, so as to do substantial justice without putting the parties to the expense of a fresh trial Where a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court was tried both in the Munsif's and District Judge's Court without objection to the jurisdiction, held, on a second appeal to the High Court that the former section must be read with sect 19 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act so as to modify its full effect in a case wrongly tried by an ordinary Civil Court and taken in appeal to the District Court both parties having submitted to the jurisdiction it was not competent to either of them on second appeal to plead the want of jurisdiction so as to render the proceedings taken in the suit void (6) In a suit for damages on account of use and occupation of land brought in a Court of Small Causes exception was taken to the plaintiffs title. The plaint was returned by the Judge under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). for presentation in the ordinary Civil Court and it baying been presented to the Munsif, who tried the suit and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decree, holding that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit Held that under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the order of the Small Cause Court Judge was regularly made and the Munsif had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the plant Semble

It is doubtful whether the Appellate Court would have been right in dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction, even supposing that the order made under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act had not expressly conferred jurisdiction upon the Munsif (1) This rule does not apply to every case in which a Court of Small Causes has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, but only to a restricted number of such cases, namely, those cases in which a Court of Small Causes has erroneously beld a suit to be, or not to be, cognizable by it. Where no question as to the Court's jurisdiction was raised by either party, and the Court of Small Causes proceeded to judgment as if the case was propelly cognizable by it, the High Court refused to interfere upon a reference made by the District Judge purporting to be made under the former section (2) The rule is an enabling one, and does not cut down the jurisdiction of the appellate and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some imistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order.

(') A party who is not appealing from a decree or order may apply for a review of judgment notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal by some other party except where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the applicant, or when, being respondent, he can present to the Appellate Court the case on which he applies for the review.

Application for review of judgment—This rule corresponds with sect 376 of Act VIII of 1859. That section was modified by sect 623 of Act X of 1877, by which Act the sub clauses (a), (b), and (c) were substituted for "by a decree of a Court of original jurisdation from which no appeal shall have been preferred to a Supreme Court, or by a decree of a District Court in appeal from which no appeal shall have been admitted by the Sudder Court, or by a decree of the Sudder Court, from which either no appeal may have been preferred to Her Majesty in Council, or an appeal having been preferred na proceedings in the suit have been transmitted to Her Majesty in Council," the wards "and important" "after the exercise of due diligence," "or order made or an account of some mistale or error appurent on the face of the record," "or order made" ind the second clause were added, and " produced" substituted for "adduced," " any other sufficient reason" for "any other good and sufficient reason," "desires to obtain" for "may be desirous of obtaining," "decree passed" for "judgment passed," and "review of judgment to the Court " for " review of judgment by the Court " The present Code substitutes "decision" for "judgment" in suh clause (c), adds the words "or order" in the second clause and omits the words "hereby" before "allowed" in clause (a), and " or to the Court, if any, to which the business of the former Court has been transferred," which had been added at the end of the first clause by Act X of See sect 114. ante

No Court has the power of setting aside an order which has been properly made, unless it is given by statute (1) The High Court has no power to amend its own decree except under the provisions of sect 206 (now sect 152) or sect 114 or this rule, (2) and inferior Courts in the Mofussil have no jurisdiction to review their own judgments except under the circumstances and with the limitations set forth in this Code (3) A Court for the relief of insolvent debto: has jurisdiction to review its own orders, (4) so had a Provincial S C Court (The former section did not apply to proceedings before the Special Judge unde the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Rehef Act (XVII of 1879) (6) but he had power to review an ex parte order made hy him, (7) nor was it affected by sect 42 o the Lower Burma Courts Act 1900 It was held that the former section die not admit of an application that a case be re instated where, the suit having heen dismissed under sect 93 (now O 1X r 3) for non appearance of the parties the plaintiff had by his own negligence allowed his rights under sect 99 (now O IX r 4) to be barred, (8) hut where a suit had been dismissed under sect 102 (now O IX r 8) and no application had been made under sect 103 (now O IX r 9), an application for review was held admissible (9) It has been held that an application for review is not a suit within the meaning of sect 13 of the last Code (now represented by sect 11) and therefore cannot operate as constructive res judicata (10)

The section was held to include an order in execution of a decree, (11) such as one dismissing an execution case, (12) even after satisfaction of the decree, the decree holder could re open the matter under sect 244 (now sect 17) and sect 623 (r 1), on the ground that he had acted under a mustake of calculation in fixing the amount that was due, (13) as also an order disallowing a r 13) (1) When an appeal has been dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI 1 11), the Lower Court has no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree, that decree having merged in the decree of the Appellate Court (2) The Code of 1859 only referred to review of decrees, but where a Judge had reviewed an order passed confirming a sale in execution of a decree, the Privy Council did not treat that review as a nullity, but dealt with the case on its merits (3)

Clause (a). - The admission of a special appeal debarred a review, even though the person applying did not prefer the appeal, (4) likewise if the special appeal has been tried and disposed of (5) In such a case the Lover Court could not review so as to modify the substance of its decree, but it might for the purpose of correcting a clerical error; (6) but if a review be applied for in proper time and before an appeal has been preferred, the Judge was held not prevented from proceeding upon the application for review by the subsequent presentation of an application to appeal to the Privy Council, and he had full power and was bound to proceed under the application for review, (7) but in that case the application for leave to appeal had not been granted, and the Madras High Court formerly held that the preferring of an appeal subsequent to the application for review, stays the review proceedings (8) But the Allahahad High Court apparently hold a contrary opinion, for there an order passed on review, purporting merely to amend the original decree, was held to amount to a new decree superseding the original decree, and an appeal filed pending review could not be heard as the decree under appeal had ceased to exist (9) A bull Bench of the Madras High Court has now held that the icview proceedings are not stayed by the preferring of an appeal (10) An applicant may withdraw his appeal and apply for a review,(11) as by the cancellation of the order for admission of the appeal it may be taken that no appeal had been admitted or preferred, but not where the appeal instead of heing withdrawn is actually dismissed (12)

Clause (c).—This does not include a judgment on a reference from a Sub ordinate Judge exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court (13) The Madras

Hi_oh Court has held that seet 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is merely directory and not mandatory (1) but the Calcutta High Court has held the contrary (2)

'Discovery of new and Important matter or evidence —Though review is allowed out this ground the Pray Council have recently pointed out that the Code exacts strict conditions so as to prevent litigants lying on their ears when they ought to be looking for evidence (3). It must be shown that it is prima facie evidence in the cause (4). The new evidence must be clear and conclusive. (a). It used not be sufficient perse to show that the previous decision was wrong or be such as to cause an overpowering balance of evidence in favour of the applicant (6). But the discovery of evidence not originally available tending to prove that a decree had been obtained by perjury is ground for an application for review (7). A judgment on special appeal cainnot be reviewed merely on the ground that new evidence to prove a fact had been discovered (8) maximuch as it would have been madmissible to impeach the decree on the hearing of the special appeal itself, (9) though it might be good ground for an sunheation for review to the Lower Court (10).

There has been a conflict of decisions as to whether a new and authoritative exposition of the law is or is not new and important matter justifying the granting of a review. On the one hand it has been held that the publication of a decision subsequent to the cass sought to be reviewed being decided was ground for a rotiew (11) that where a review was sought on the strength of a Full Bench decision it should have been made within mirety days of that decision (12) and that where a review had been properly granted the case should be governed by any new exposition of the law laid down since the date of the original decision (13) also that the decision of the Prvy Council in an appeal is new and important matter for the purposes of an application for review in respect of a decree made on a subsequent accrual of the same cause of action as that on which the decree appealed against was based (14). Ou the other hand it has been held that a subsequent Full Bench case overruling the authority on where the point was raised for the first time in delivering judgment; (1) or the Judge had made an error in calculation; (2) or had based his decision on a decree which was subsequently set aside on appeal.(3) The production of an authority, which ought to have been but which was not cited at the first hearing, laying down a view of the law contrary to that taken by the Judge, is sufficient ground, (4) though formerly it was held otherwise. (5) So where the Privy Council had given an authoritative exposition at variance with the decision of the High Court on which the decree sought to be reviewed had been based a review was allowed (6)

A decree against a minor properly represented in the suit cannot be reopened on review by the minor on attaining majority, on the ground that the decree did not reserve an opportunity to him to show cause against it on attaining inajority, (7) but otherwise where the Court passing the decree in terms of a compromise against a minor did not inquire into the circumstauces which led to the filing of the petition of compromise nor granted any leave to compromise under sect. 462 (now O. XXXII. r. 7).(8) Where, however, he seeks to set aside a decree on the ground that the compromise made by his guardian and on which the decree was based was fraudulent, his remedy was formerly held to be by suit and not by way of review.(9) But by a later decision it was held that fraud practised upon a party in connection with a petition of compromise was a good ground for roviewing the decree made thereon.(10) A mistake in copying out a petitiou of compromise may not itself be a good ground for review, but coupled with an allegation of fraud it is.(11)

A review has been refused to be allowed on the ground that if the facts had been better or more fully placed before the Court the decision would have been different,(12) even coupled with the fact that there was a subsequent decision of the Privy Council on the point, the petition being seven years after the decision sought to he reviewed; (13) or merely to supply defects on the part of pleaders in their conduct of appeals; (14) or to enable the Court to reconsider its judgment on the same evidence; (15) or on the ground that the Court improperly neglected to examine a witness, if the objection was not taken when the case was heard by the Court of Appeal; (16) or that the Court's decision is contrary to the weight of ovidence (1) The Privy Council has, however, held that the decision in the last mentioned case does not himt the discretion of the Court in saying what reason is good and sufficient or what may be so far requisite to the ends of justice, as to support an application for review (2). That the Appeal Court's decision was based on a ground first raised in appeal was held no reason for granting a review (3). And grounds which virtually disclose reasons for an appeal from a diction enhance, it has been said he the bases of a review (4). It has also been held that a point raised on appeal but abandoned in argument cannot ordinarily he a ground for review, (5) and that the fact that one Divisional Bench of the High Court has decided a point at variance with the decision of another Divisional Bench is not such a ground (6)

"May apply"—The proceedings taken to obtain a review pass through three stages. In the first place the pirty applies for a rule, which application is either granted or rejected. This is the first stage. If the rule is granted the other side shows cause upon which the rule is made absolute or discharged. This is the second stage. The last stage is where if the rule is made absolute, the case is directed to be reheard, and an order or decree passed upon such hearing. The application should it possible be to the Judge who passed the decree or order sought to be reviewed, or as the Privy Council has put it.—

"We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before mother and a different Judge, because death or some other un expected or unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review ' (7) Expedition in presenting a petition for review is indispensable (8) A party applying must show that there is good and sufficient cause for granting the review before he can be heard to argue that the decision is erroneous (9) There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant the Judicial Committee in allowing even after an order of His Majesty in Council has issued upon their report a re hearing at the instance of one of the parties hut this is an indulgence with a view mainly to provent irremediable injustice when by some accident without any blame the party has not been heard and an order has been made madvertently as if he had been heard (10) An application for review is the proper method of setting aside adecree made on a compromise (11) is to whether a second application can be made for review see r 9 post

'Shall be made "-The remarks of the Privy Council in recard to expedition in presenting applications for review should be horne in mind Lordships said, 'We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review mucht take place before another and a different Judge, because death or some other unexpected and unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it, but we do say that such exceptions are allow able only or necessitate. We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ou ht to review, and that for the attainment of that object. expedition in pre-enting a petition for the review is indispensable, and the only practical course for attaining that end is by accelerating the hearing of the review before accident or unexpected events shall have removed the original Judge " (1)

"Made'-Where a petition for review of judgment is presented to the Judge who delivered it and he directs notices to issue thereon (2) or directs the application to be entered on the register and that the fees for service of notice he deposited and is then transferred his successor has jurisdiction to make the order sought to be revised (3) In such cases the grounds for review are not confined to those mentioned in this rule. But it would be otherwise where the Judge to whom the petition was presented merely ordered a copy of the decree to he produced and did not issue notice (4) The Allahahad High Court, however, have construed made 'to juclude a hearing and determination of the application for review (3) This variance of opinion has been set at rest by the concluding clause of this rule which has affirmed the decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay

"Only to the Judge '-The primary intention of granting a review is a reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge as distinguished from in appeal which is a hearing before another tribunal (6) If a Court has been abolished and its husiness transferred to another Court presided over hy another Judge, the latter cannot entertain an application for review except in the cases mentioued in this rule (7) nor can a Judge by transferring a case to his own file confer on himself the power to review an order of dismissal pronounced by a Judge suhordinate to him (8) A Judge of a Mofussil Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to review a case tried by his predecessor subject to the provisions of this rule (9) and "grant the same" for "grant the review" Proviso (b) was added by the Code of 1877. The present Code has substituted "uhere" for "f' and added the words "or order" and "or made" appearing in italies, but has onnited the words "and the Judge shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion" before the first proviso (1). Clause (c) of the former section has been embodied in r. 2, ante. The form of Notice is given in the First Schedule, Appendix G, No. 14.

This rule applies to orders rejecting or admitting reviews and not to judg ments on review (2). A decree of a Division Bench of the High Court dismissing an appeal for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper hook can only be set aside by an order under this rule (3).

An application for review involves three stages It commences ordinarily with an ex parte application under sect 623 (now O XLVII r 1) The Court then may either reject the application at once, or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage the application may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of the rule may involve, to some extent an investiga tion into the merits. If the rule is discharged, then the case ends. If, on the other hand the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached, the case is heard on the ments and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule is discharged or on the re hearing the original deeree be repeated. in law there is a material difference, for in the latter case the whole matter having been re-opened there is a fresh decree. In the former case the parties are relegated to and still rest on, the old decree (4) In practice these three stages are not always kept distinct, but are semetimes combined (5)

"Shall reject the application"—Such rejection cannot after the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the riving can be binding so as to after such judgment or decree (6). Where on special appeal the case was remanded for trial of a particular ine, and an application for review was made in order that the suit might be remaided for the trial of another issue, it was held that as that would involve going through the record again the application could not be granted as it would in fact by to grant a second special appeal (7)

"Shall grant the same"—Under the Code of 100 which provided that where an application for review was beyond the prescribed time a Judge should record his reasons for admitting it such proceeding and the order

idmitting the review could be made in one and the same proceeding (I) An order intended to operate as an order for review is not invalidated by an irregu larity in its form by reasons of which it purports to be an order made on an application to set aside the decree and restore a suit for trial (2) The order made under this rule is not one on the re hearing of the case on review that comes later (3) Although a District or Assistant Judge of Special Judge under sect 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act is not governed by this Code, he has discretion to grant a review on the ground of mistake (4) or non service of notice, (5) and he may review an ex parte order, (6) but notice of the application must be served on the other side (7) The Codes of 1877 and 1882 required the Judge granting an application for review to record with his own hand his reasons for his opinion, and it was held that this should be done before the review of judgment was granted (8) The failure to do so did not necessirily make the act one without jurisdiction, (9) but such an order was bad and the ease must be remanded (10) This was not a hard and fast rule, the words were directory, and the order was not necessarily invalid though their might be cases in which it was necessary in the interests of justice that the reasons should be recorded, and in such cases the recording would be essential to the validity of the order (11) In granting a review the Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application for review (12)

Clause (a) —Notice must be served on the opposite party to appear before a suit can be revived, (13) but not in the case of a review of an application for the admission of a special appeal, as such application being ex parte, a review of the same is also ex parte (14) In the Codes of 1877 and 1882 this clause only made mention of decrees and not orders. The omission has been rectified by the present rule

Clause (b)—Loid Romilly, M.R., said, "Re hearing a cause upon obtaining fresh evidence is a most dangerous practice. It is the duty of suitors to bring forward all their evidence at the first and nothing would be more mischievous than to allow the principle to prevail, that a person should endeavour to get a case heard upon imperfect evidence, and trust to succeeding on that evidence and then, when it is found that he has not succeeded, to bring forward furtler evidence." for the purpose of correcting the error on review accompanied by another similar document to assist the Court was held not to be an application coming within this rule (1) When the new evidence was available to the applicant and might, with anything like diligence, have been produced by him, the application for review was refused, (2) but where the applicant produced with his application for review certain documents to show that the Judge's decision was erroncons on the evidence originally before him, it was held that he was not in fault in not producing them previously, as they were not originally necessary to the proof of his claim (3) The applicant must also show that the new evidence is prima facie evidence in the cause (4)

"Strict proof"-The Privy Council have recently emphasized this con dition (5) Want of such proof is a ground of appeal, (6) and the decision on seview must be reversed, (7) but where a party had no opportunity of giving such proof owing to the opposite party, who had notice, not appearing and making no objection, the opposite party cannot afterwards be allowed to object (8) Strict proof means proof according to the forms of law, that is, with close adherence to rule (9) It is not sufficient to make an affidavit that the applicant was not aware of the existence of a document, but he must also show that he used due diligence and made inquiries to ascertain its existence and found it was not available, (10) but an applicant for review on the ground that he had not been afforded sufficient time to produce a document at the original hearing has not to prove the document was not within his knowledge (11)

Where the Judge or Judges, or any one of the Judges, is who passed the decree or made the order, a Application for review neview of which is applied for, continues or in Court consisting of two or more Judges continue attached to the Court at the time when the application for a review is presented, and is not or are not precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application from considering the decree or order

adduced the new evidence on which his application for review was based, as he had urged in opposition to such application (1) Where in the opinion of the Privy Council the High Court had wrongly allowed a review and had admitted additional evidence, their Lordships did not consider it right to exclude that evidence from their consideration (2)

Registry of application granted, and order for re-hearing. as it thinks fit.

When an application for review is granted, a note [thereof shall be made in the register and the Court may at once re-hear the case or make such order in regard to the re-hearing

Registry of application granted, and order for re hearing.-This rule corresponds with sect 380 of Act VIII of 1859 That section after the word "register" ran " of suits or appeals (as the ease may be) and the Court shall give such order in regard to the re-hearing of the suit as it may deem proper in the circumstances of the case" The present wording was adopted by sect 630 of Act X of 1877 There has been some diversity of decision ou the question ns to what may be gone into at the re-hearing The Calcutta High Court formerly held that the applicant was only entitled to go into the points on which the rule granting the review was allowed, and that matters not mentioned when the rule was argued could not be gone into, (3) but later the same Court held it was discretionary with the Court to re-hear the whole ease or only the particular point on which the review was granted (4) The Bombay High Court has, however, held that when a review has been admitted the whole case is reopened (5) And it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the expression "rehear the case means "rehear the whole case," and that if the ease is to be reheard only upon special noints, the order must he made under the last words of the section, which enable the Court to make such orders as it thinks fit (6) It has been held that where a case is admitted to review by the deciding Judge and is afterwards tried by another Judge, the new Judge must try the point directed by the order of review, (7) and that a Judge grauting a review on one point has no power to go into or to decide a matter already decided finally and as to which no application for review was made (8) When a plaintiff obtained a review on the ground that he was entitled, upon the allegations and proofs on the record to the full relief which he had sought, it was held not to be open to the defendant on the re-hearing to adduce evidence he ought to have done at the hearing (1) A Court should in its judgment on the re hearing give reasons for coming to a different con clusion from that which it had previously formed (2) When a case is re heard on review the order on the rehearing is a new decree whatever the result is, (3) even though on the application for review coming on for re hearing the Judge allowed it on a comparatively insignificant point and forthwith directed a clerical error in the decree to be rectified, and the time within which to appeal on the decree runs from the date of such order (4)

9. No application to review an order made on an application for a review of a decree or order passed Bar of certain appli or made on a review shall be entertained. cations

Review of review -- With verbal alterations and a transposition this rule is the same as the last paragraph of sect 629 of the former Code first portion of the rule refers to the second, and the second portion refers to the third, stage of the proceedings through which an application for a review may pass (5) It has been a question whether these words are tantamount to saying "no second application for review shall be made," that is, whether such an application is barred in all cases (6) As regards this, it is clear that if an application for review is allowed at the second stage, then the order allow ing the application cannot as being an order made on an application for review be itself reviewed Similarly an order made in the third stage after the admission of the application for review and after the case has been re heard, whether that order confirm, alte, or leverse the decree sought to be reviewed, is a new decree (7) There is here a decree or older, as the case may be, passed or made upon a review, and this rule prohibits a further review (8) There remains a third ease, viz where the application for review is rejected at the first or second stage, and the case is in consequence not re heard. In this case the order itself rejecting the application for review cannot be reviewed But the question then arises whether a second application for review of the original order or decree may be made on different grounds For instance, does the rejection of an application based on the ground of illeged error apparent on the face of the record preclude a subsequent appli cation based on the ground of the discovery of new evidence? It may be the second application is not for a review of the order made on an application for review, nor is it for a review of a decree or order passed or made on a review. On the other hand, though the original order is directly attacked by such a subsequent application, the effect of the latter of successful, is to grant the review which, though on different grounds was previously refused It has been said (1) that the present provision was first inserted in the Code of 1877 to meet the decision of the Full Bench in Nasiruddin Khan v Indro marayan Chowdhry (2) that the Court may admit a review even after a prior order rejecting it On the other hand the Calcutta High Court has held (3) that though the order of rejection is final in the sense that it cannot be made the direct subject of review, these provisions do not prohibit the admission of a subsequent application for review of the original decree on a different ground from that which was the basis of the previous application which was

Miscellaneous.

1. (1) Every process issued under this Code shall be Process to be served at served at the expense of the party on whose behalf it is issued, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(2) The court fee chargeable for such service shall be paid within a time to be fixed before the process is issued.

"Unless the Court otherwise directs"—In the matter of H C Studd, (I) Rampin, J, said. "This provision of the Civil Procedure Code does not appear to me to give a Court any power to depart from the rules of the High Court on the subject of the levy of process fees, or to remit those fees. The section relates to the payment of process fees by the parties to a suit, and gives the Court, acting judicially, power to inke an order, hetween party and party only, as to who should pay the process fees. It does not expressly give power to remit the fees, or, what comes to the same thing, to order that the process should be served free, or, in other words, at the expense of Government, and in the present case we cannot, I think, make such an order under sect 93, C P C, seeing that the Government is no party to the suit." Ghose, J, however, declined to express any opinion upon the question, "whether or not the Court has the power to relax in any case the process fee rules," and Rampini, J, himself pointed out that some Benches readily grant a relaxation of these rules.

Within a time to be fixed by the Court—If no time is fixed, there is no obligation to pay the court fee, and where processes could not be served on witnesses for non payment of the court fee, in such a case it was held that the suit could not be dismissed for default of evidence (2)

2 All orders, notices and other documents required by orders and notices this Code to be given to or served on any person shall be served in the manner provided for the service of summons.

THE THIRD SCHEDULE.

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS.

Where the execution of a decree has been transferred in to the Collector under section 65, he may-

Powers of Collector. (a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immoreable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment debtor to raise the amount of the decree: or (b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold; or

(c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary.

This schedule deals with the functions of the Collector as the authority invested with jurisdiction to see that the decree is satisfied. The authority is given for the purpose of enabling him to determine the best mode of satisfying the decree But his discretion does not extend to any jurisdiction to determine whether the decree has been satisfied or not (1)

Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree is Procedure of Collector ordering the sale of minoveable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting in special cases the same, but being a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to beheve that all the habilities of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immoveable property, may proceed as heremafter provided.

"Powers."--The Collector, it has been held, is limited to one or other of the courses specifically mentioned in the section (2)

(1) In any such case as is referred to in paragraph 2, AΊ

the Collector shall publish a notice, allowing Notice to be given to a period of sixty days from the date of its decree-holders and to persons having claims publication for compliance and calling uponon property. (a) every person holding a decree for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor eapable of execution by sale of his immoveable property and which such decree-holder desires to have so executed, and every holder of a decree for the payment of money in execution of which proceedings for the sale of such property are pending, to produce before the Collector a copy of the decree, and a certificate from the Court which passed or is executing the same, declaring the amount ie coverable thereunder.

(b) every person having any claim on the said property to submut to the Collector a statement of such claim, and to produce the documents (if any) by which it is evidenced

(4) Such notice shall be published by being affixed on a conspicuous part of the court house of the Court which made the original order for sale, and in such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit, and where the address of any such decree holder or claimant is known, a copy of the notice shall be sent to him by post or otherwise

(1) Upon the expiration of the said period, the Col Βl Amount of decrees for lector shall appoint a day for hearing any representations which the indgment debtor payment of money to be ascertained, and immoveand the deeree holders or claimants (if any) able property available may desire to make, and for holding such in for their satisfaction.

quity as he may deem necessary for informing himself as to the nature and extent of such decrees and claims and of the judg ment debtor's immoveable property, and may, from time to time, adjourn such hearing and inquity

() Where there is no dispute as to the fact or extent of the hability of the judgment-debtor to any of the decrees or claims of which the Collector is informed, or as to the iclative priorities of such decrees or claims, or as to the hability of any such property for the satisfaction of such decrees or clums, the Collector shall draw up a statement, specifying the amount to be recovered for the discharge of such decrees, the order in which such decrees and claims are to be satisfied, and the immoreable property as alable for that purpose.

(3) Where any such dispute arises, the Collector shall refer the same, with a statement thereof and his own opinion thereon, to the Court which made the original order for sale, and shall, pending the reference, stay proceedings relating to the subject thereof. The Court shall dispose of the dispute if the matter thereof is within its jurisdiction, or transmit the case to a competent Court for disposal, and the final decision shall be communicated to the Collector, who shall then draw up a statement as above provided in accordance with such decision

Amount of decrees to be ascertained and property available for their satisfaction—It was held that the assignees of a decree for money obtained against a person whose property had been taken over by the Collector under sect 326, Act X of 1877, whilst such property was under the management of the Collector, were not entitled to be placed on the list of creditors prepared by the Collector under sect 322n of the last Code. An application to be placed on the said list of creditors should be made to the Collector and not to the District Judge (1). An appeal from a decision under this section by which a disputed chim is settled has, in Madras, been treated as a miscellaneous appeal, i.e. an appeal from a decision under this section by which a disputed chim is settled has, in Madras, been treated as a miscellaneous appeal, i.e. an appeal from a decree not passed in a regular suit (2).
